

WRECK ON THE BIG FOUR

Dozen Killed and Score Hurt
At Indianapolis, Ind.,
This Morning.

Students From Purdue University
Among the Dead.

Victims' Screams Heard for a Mile—Scene Following the Crash Was Sickening—Doctors by the Score Hurried to the Scene of the Collision.

Indianapolis, Oct. 31.—In a frightful wreck here on the Big Four railroad to day from twelve to fifteen people were killed and about 18 were injured.

Among the killed were a number of Purdue university students who were coming to this city to play football this afternoon. At noon twelve bodies had been taken to the morgue.

The accident was due to a cut of cars running down from the switch at a gravel pit. One coach was cut in two and the engine was thrown on its side.

The engine of the passenger train is buried in the sand pit and neither the fireman nor the engineer has been found. The report that both jumped is untrue. The name of neither is yet known. It is certain that at least 12 lives were lost and many injured, and doctors by the score are on the scene.

The dead and injured can be seen on the sidewalk for two blocks and the screams of the injured can be heard for a mile.

The wrecked train carried 1300 students and their friends.

George Shaw, Indiana Harbor, freshman.

W. D. Hamilton, Illinois, member of the team.

Jay Hamilton, Huntington, Ind., a member of the team.

A. K. Powell, Texas, member of the team.

W. R. Robertson, Indianapolis, died soon afterwards.

Seven unidentified dead.

Fatally injured:

Captain Osborn, R. Reibler, F. Detring, Clark Meyers, H. O. Wright, W. H. Leslie, Joan Miller, W. J. McManus, T. A. Bailey, Wm. Sprau.

Among the injured are:

H. K. Wright, Pendleton, seriously hurt.

Denny Long, seriously.

Joe Knatt.

Will Sprague, seriously.

Chas. Langeman, severely.

Dr. Reatty, seriously.

W. G. McManus, both legs broken.

For two blocks each way the injured are lying along the track screaming with pain.

The train was due here at 10:30 this morning.

The accident happened at a point where the Big Four track turns a sharp curve. A gravel train that did not know of the special train's orders was hurrying north. Both trains were going at a 20 mile rate when the collision came.

A number are missing whose bodies may be found in the wreck.

The scene following the crash was sickening. Mangled forms were strewn along the track for a distance of two blocks, the conscious screaming with pain, and begging that they be given relief. Some of the unfortunates were pinned under the wreckage unable to relieve themselves, and they beseeched their would-be rescuers to put them to death so great was their agony. The work of rescue was made difficult by the position of the engine, which had fallen across the pile of the wrecked first coach.

Another Big Four Wreck.

Springfield, O., Oct. 31.—The Big Four Peoria and Eastern passenger train due here from Indianapolis at 7 o'clock, collided with the rear end of a freight train west of this city last evening, telescoping the engine and derailing three cars. Four persons were injured. Aaron Kessler, of Covington, possibly fatally. The other injured are D. A. Byers, engineer, Indianapolis; John Maier, fireman, also of Indianapolis; and Harriet Boggs of this city. Officials here say the wreck was due to the failure of the freight to carry its rear end flag.

Three People Hurt.

Indianapolis, Oct. 31.—A Columbia avenue and an Irvington car collided at one of the principal downtown crossings this morning and the force of the collision threw the Columbia avenue car on to of the Irvington. These were dangerously injured.

Mrs. George David, head cut and injured internally.

Mrs. Amelia Berger, injured internally, back wrenched.

Miss Jennie Holt, head cut.

FATHER SIDLEY DEAD.

Springfield, O., Oct. 31.—Rev. Father W. H. Sidley, pastor of St. Raphael's church, died at 2:40 this morning from typhoid fever.

And Conviction of Man
Lasted Less Than Five Hours.

White Plains, N. Y., Oct. 31.—The swiftest murder trial ever heard in this state was ended inside of five hours before Justice Gaynor, in the Supreme court here yesterday. Oscar Borgstrom, who cut his wife's throat and then attempted to kill himself, was tried, found guilty and sentenced to die in the electric chair at Sing Sing, during the second week of December, and all in four hours and fifty-six minutes. The principal witness against Borgstrom was his young step-daughter, Frieder Lobeck.

SATURDAY.

Engineer's Foot Was Caught In Machinery and Badly Lacerated—
May Save the Member.

Nathan Patchen, engineer at the F. F. Fee Hardware factory on Sixteenth street met with a bad accident about 7 o'clock Saturday morning, soon after beginning work for the day. While attending to his duties his right foot was caught in the machinery between the saw carriage and what are known as the "live rollers." The result was that the ankle was badly dislocated and the back of the foot terribly lacerated. He was taken in Bowers' & Bradley's ambulance to the residence of his uncle, B. F. Showalter, 517 Granville street, where he makes his home. Every effort will be made to save the unfortunate man's foot, and the physicians hope that this can be accomplished.

New York, Oct. 31.—Though Dowie's restoration host will leave the city for Zion on Monday Dowie declared today that he would remain and carry out his engagement at Carnegie Hall. There he will hold meetings Wednesday, Friday and Sunday. An interesting feature in connection with these meetings will be competition in healing. ## DAZZLING

Display of Northern Lights Paralyzed
Telegraph Business in New York City.

New York, Oct. 31.—A dazzling display of the aurora borealis, or northern lights, that strange phenomenon that comes from the icy region, occurred in this section this morning. For several hours it paralyzed telegraph service, and when communication was partially restored it was found that the electrical display had occurred along the northern section of the United States to Chicago and beyond that point.

Today the aurora is still in the air as its effects are plainly felt on all northern telegraph circuits. This was the first display of the aurora in New York for 16 years and it made a fine show. While at its height every telegraph wire out of New York was affected and for a time the service was at a standstill.

COSHOCOTON

OPERA HOUSE DAMAGED BY FIRE
THIS MORNING.

Chicago Stock Company Lost Scenery and Costumes—A Big Fire at Johnstown, Pa.

Coshocoton, O., Oct. 31.—The Coshocoton opera house was gutted by fire this morning, entailing a loss of $5,000. The Chicago Stock company lost scenery and costumes, valued at $1,000. George K. Brown, of Bay City, Mich., a member of the company was seriously hurt by running a spike through his foot while trying to save his trunk. The fire evidently started from a smoldering cigar stub in a room in the building used by a negro club, and the entire block was saved only by heroic work. The opera house will probably be transformed into offices as a new theatre was opened here this season. The stock company will be given a benefit tonight at the new opera house by the citizens.

ANOTHER OPERA HOUSE FIRE.
Johnstown, Pa., Oct. 31.—The opera house block was totally destroyed by fire this morning and one of the city's handsomest buildings is a pile of ruins. Loss will be about $100,000 on the building and a larger sum on the contents.

A CAUSTIC VALEDICTORY

Pronounced Today by Auditor of U. S. Postoffice Department.

Arraigns Lax Methods Employed
By the Administration.

Mr. Castle Says Government is Paying Out Forty Million Annually on Certificates Without Check or Review—Castle is About to Retire From the Service.

Washington, Oct. 31.—H. A. Castle, auditor for the postoffice department, who is soon to retire because of criticism of his department, growing out of the recent investigation, delivered a caustic valedictory at noon today, in the form of an annual report which arraigns the lax administrative methods employed in the department and which in effect holds the postmaster general largely accountable for the recent scandals.

In criticizing the methods of accounting, through congressional action he points out wherein over $40,000,000 annually has been and is being paid out upon mere certification, without check or review. He says no account is kept by the auditor of postage stamps, stamped paper and envelopes, etc., nor is there between the department and the manufacturers or contractors for furnishing such paper.

"This account," to use the words of the report, "should have been opened when postage stamps were first introduced, say fifty years ago, and continuously kept until this time. That account would be the fundamental corrective checkup on substantially the whole revenues of the postoffice department amounting to over $90,000,000. That no such account has been opened or kept, is an astonishing revelation of defective methods."

In referring to one branch of the department to which the attention of the President has been called in connection with the late investigation, the report says:

"Attention has been forcibly directed to the settlement of claims of railway companies for transporting the mails, involving the payment of nearly $10,000,000 annually. In three or four annual reports I have fully set forth the inconsistencies and dangers of the practice which has always hitherto prevailed, of certifying for payment to railroad companies those immense sums upon the mere certificate of the second assistant postmaster general's office, that the service has been performed, reserving the right to correct errors and omissions. There is no evidence in the auditor's office as to the weight of mails carried by the respective railroads tending to show the amount of pay to which it is entitled, under the law. The sums to be paid to the railroads for carrying the mails depend upon the weight, which is ascertained once in four years."

Mr. Castle quotes law to absolve himself from blame in connection with the failure to detect bribery in connection with the purchase of patented articles for the department and recommends as a preventative of future fraud that Congress amend the patent laws to provide that "when any branch of the government desires to use a patented article in the public service some just method of deciding on the value of that article based on cost of manufacture, reasonable profit and fair royalty, and that the same be fixed as to the price to be paid therefor."

Few fullbacks, possessing the ground game and punting ability that Capt. Salmon does, are known on the gridiron. His wonderful feat of bucking the Michigan eleven back for 85 yards as he did last year is still the talk of gridiron circles. The college this year is represented by a fast, aggressive eleven, of simon pure amateurs who can be depended on to carry the old gold and blue with honor to themselves and credit to the school.

CRESCUS AN ACCIDENT DUE TO SUPERSTITION

Toledo, Oct. 31.—Cresceus 1.50.3-4, the undisputed champion of the track, is an "accident." But for a series of extraordinary occurrences, hiping on the superstition of a party of horsemen, Cresceus' dam would never have been bred to the game old Robert McGregor, that "monarch of the home stretch," whose most famous son is the first of the horse kingdom to trot a mile under 2:00. The story of Cresceus dates back several years to the time when Mike Enright, now of Enright, Va., and Jas. Dority, deceased, conducted a stock farm near Toledo. They were ambitious to breed and own a great race horse, and to get stock from which to select a mother or a future champion attended a sale at Louisville, conducted by Barney Treacy. There they picked up thirteen yearlings. Being of a superstitious turn of mind, Dority refused to sign the bidden of 13 home, or to consider his purchase closed with that unlucky number, arguing that no good could come of a deal wherein the mystic 13 was involved. Enright demurred. He argued that there was nothing in the 13 superstition, but, to appease his partner, consented to the purchase of a 13th animal. The one selected was an old brood mare named Contention. The yearlings were given the best of care and one named Toledo showed great speed but met with an accident and died. Contention was also bred and dropped her foal at the Enright-Lority stock farm and the foal was named Mabel. Mabel was sold to George Ketcham for $250, on Mr. Dority's death. The filly Mabel, upon reaching a mature age, was bred to Robert McGregor and her foal was a puny yellow colt. At first Ketcham was undecided whether the colt should live or die. But finally made up his mind not to put it away. The colt was given care and the best of treatment, becoming the sturdy champion in whom is shown in such a marked degree the stamina and the "heart" of old Bob McGregor. Both of Cresceus' parents are dead. Most complete and safe facilities for care of furniture and merchandise. All in an out-of-the-way spot on the Hurbaugh Transfer and Storage Co. THE CAKE WALK

By ZOE ANDERSON MORRIS Copyright, 1903, by Zoe Anderson Morris

THIRTEEN programme at an end, the manager, advancing to the footlights, announced the cake walk. There was a hushed moment. Then those who had stood tirelessly throughout on chairs made a mad rush for the seats giving upon the aisles down which the participants were to pass.

On the platform the judges had ranged themselves in a formidable row; importantly solemn. The cake stood before them, a square of flaky pink, upon which rose a giant pyramid, prismatic in the snowy brilliancy of its being.

The music commencing, the great curtain at the left swung aside, and the drum major appeared. Dancing daintily forth, he flung his baton to the roof—or nearly—caught it again and received the attendant burst of applause after the fashion of one to the manner born and accustomed.

Close on his heels followed the first couple. Jasper Jefferson Jones occupied a seat above the row of boxes at the extreme right, where an excellent view was to be had of the walkers as they rounded the curve and pranced down the broad aisle facing the entrance, but from which, because of the dense crowd intervening, only a parasol or two could be seen as they passed from beneath the curtain to this aisle.

In order to see, therefore, he rose, the whites of his eyes gleaming in the excited dusk of his countenance.

The effort proving fruitless, he forced himself to sit again with the rest, occupying himself with consulting his programme, running a dark and trembling forefinger restlessly down throughout the list of names and finally stopping at "47—Maggie Malone, Frog Eyed Pete accompanying."

He raised his head in time to see the first couple come muncing around the curve, the girl looking seriously into the face of the man as she bowed, pirouetted once or twice and passed serenely on. Other couples, trusting to the splendor of their attire and appearance rather than to their nimbleness of toe, walked sedately by. The dignity of their walk verged upon stateliness, but they failed to interest him.

Again he looked across toward the curtain through which others thronged. He caught sight of a bobbing white parasol. His heart bobbed with it. It approached the bend of the aisle, and the girl holding it faced him. On the sleeve of the man with her shone a broad white placard, upon which was his number.

"47—Frog Eyed Pete and Maggie." The couple ahead of her, hurrying on, had left some considerable space in which to cavort. Maggie leaped to the occasion. Jasper's head whirled with the turns she made, his glowing eyes drinking in the coquetry of her filmy skirts of delicate white, contrasting well with the olive of her skin, the slender mold of her ankles, the droop of her picture hat heavy with pink roses, the roundness of her cheek and the innocent look of her narrow eyes fixed not upon him, but upon her partner, Frog Eyed Pete, whose costume, containing her colors, matched hers in a way very pleasing to behold. In like manner the wonderful variety of his gyrations coincided with the grace of her pirouettes.

Maggie had paused effectively in the center of the aisle. With a whirl she that shelters the champion, and over his grave is erected a red marble shaft on which are inscribed these words: ROBT. MCGREGOR Monarch of the Home Stretch. Foaled 1871. Died 1893. The Sire of Great Race Horses. Saves Two From Death.

HURBAUGH STORAGE.

second burst of applause which echoed from box to gallery. A dazzling couple held the floor before him. Frowningly he recognized them—Pickaninny Simpson and her dapper partner, Light Foot Sam. Involuntarily he shaded his eyes from the blaze of their coloring. Gorgeous in pluk skirts profusely bespangled, Pickaninny flourished a pink parasol above a splendid hat of the same rich color as she twined halfway round, then twined back again, persistently repeating this performance until the wonder of it was that her body did not rebel at the tremendous nature of the exertion and separate at the hinge of the waist line where it was joined.

If Maggie had been greeted with approbation the applause ensuing upon the accomplishment of this feat was stupendous. The afters rang.

The couple sailed triumphantly on, and the music stopped.

Then the manager, again advancing, announced in stentorian tones that out of the fifty or more couples on the floor ten of the best would be selected for the final competition for the prize.

SHE WAS WILLOWLIKE AND SUPPLE.

This was done. Those who had depended upon their appearance rather than on their nimbleness of toe were promptly dropped out of the running.

Then commenced the chasteering of the ten. Jasper's pride threatened to escape the confines of his high white collar and burst the button thereof when among these favored ones he discerned the rapturous parasol of Maggie Malone. Again she came tip-toeing slowly around the curve, this time very elegant in a movement somewhat resembling that of the minut. Bowing low in the elaborate courtesy of dames of long ago, she challenged the gallery.

It shouted itself hoarse. Shiflocks of applause ascended roofward, whereupon, not to be outdone, Frog Eyed Pete turned himself wrong side out and all but stood on his head with his feet in the atmosphere.

Gazing gloomily upon this excess of effort, Jasper Jefferson Jones' black lips compressed themselves into a grim line of disapproval, which happily for Frog Eyed Pete was all lost on him.

His glance left the offender and rested on Maggie Malone, who just then skirted the curve nearest him, her cream colored countenance turned gravely upward. He leaned breathlessly forward, hoping for a look of recognition, but none came. Accompanied by a ringing echo of cheers, she danced on and on, willowlike and supple as a nymph, and disappeared.

Her disappearance made room for Pickaninny, who, spanning blithely into the arena, went into contortions of cake walking bordering upon extravaganzas.

It would be easier to describe what Pickaninny didn't do than what she did.

The crowd went mad. It shrieked. It stamped. It yelled. Calls of "No. 57" her number, reverberated, split the air, broke upon the din like hailstones on a roof, and Pickaninny passed.

Though the evolutions of the eight other couples were well worth watching, Jasper failed to watch them. Except for the alert policemen, formidable in brass buttoned uniforms, stationed here, there and everywhere, he would have left his place in the gallery and lagged hungrily along in the shining wake of Maggie Malone.

The music halting for the third time, the manager stood before the footlights, facing the cake and the audience.

"No. 57" was hurried at him from all points of the compass, mingled with some cries of "No. 47!" but not many. Jasper came nearer than he had ever done before to turning white. "No. 57" Pickaninny's number. And the crowd, dazed by the glitter of her spangles, apparently determined to set aside whatever decision the judges might attempt to make and decide for itself.

A lump rising in his throat at the thought of Pickaninny's triumph and his Maggie's defeat threatened to choke him.

The elation voice of the manager broke in on his distress. "The judges so far have been unable to arrive at any decision," it said. "Now, five will be picked from the ten, and these will walk directly in front of them upon the stage."

The judges employed ten minutes or so in moving back to make room for those who were to walk, and Jasper contrived to show or other to live through this interval and on into that of the appearance of the first three couples who came forward from the wings, bowing to the judges.

The fourth arrived—Pickaninny, the blaze of her spangles further augmented by the flare of the footlights.

The welkin rang. Hats were buried ceilingward. She took her place with the rest, and Maggie, ravishing in the filmy cloud of her white apparel, advanced and bowed low amid shrieks of cheering, but not shrieks of so exaggerated a character as had greeted her rival of the spangled skirts and parasol.

The music commenced. A girl drifted lightly along the stage flanked by a partner so nimble of limb as to seem to be double jointed. They danced and whirled and rotated and stood aside. Two others walked, and it came to be the turn of Pickaninny. Yells of "No. 57" greeted her. With some difficulty the manager quieted the house, and she danced.

Jasper was filled with dismay as he saw the grace of her former antics multiplied manifold. She twisted backward, this way and that and sideways, the whirl of her pink parasol serving, like the parasol of the rope walker, to steady her. Light Foot Sam, now near, now far, aiding and abetting her to the threatening of serious detriment to the safety of his spinal column.

Roars ensued. The judges changed color. Evidently in the event the cake was not given to Pickaninny anything might be expected, mob riots perhaps, followed in all probability by a lynching or two. Jasper's heart sank within him. He gave a long drawn sigh as she retired, and Maggie drifted forward with a bow.

All his soul sprang to his eyes as he watched her drift, light as a will-o'-the-wisp, across the glimmer of the faroff stage, Frog Eyed Pete following after, and flinging her chocolate arms aloft in an attitude of supplication.

A mild murmur of applause resulted. With distended orbs Jasper followed her movements. They could hardly be called movements. She floated. She swam. She rested upon nothing, as it were—in other words, on air.

The excitement of the moment suddenly rushed to Jasper's head. Framing his mouth in two black hands, he shouted across the breadth of the intervening space:

"Maggie! Maggie! Oh, go on! Keep it up! Maggie! For de Lawd's sake, keep it up!"

Maggie, carried away by sheer ecstasy of motion, was keeping it up. She drifted, she pirouetted, she lost herself in the rhythm, the madness and the whirl.

Jasper's distended eyes gleamed. The dusky hands about his wide mouth trembled. He shouted again:

"Maggie! Maggie! Give 'em de toe turn, Maggie! Oh, Maggie, give 'em de toe turn! De toe turn!"

Whether or not she heard or by some species of telepathy the intensity of his desire had made itself known to her, she vaulted skyward, light as down, rested on the tip of a pointed toe for one mad moment and whirled.

Again she poised herself, butterfly-like, and Pickaninny, looking forlornly and prophetically on, saw the beginning of her finish.

And as for Jasper, he stood transfixed while Maggie bowed backward to the exhilarating music of applause, and the manager, defying lynch law and mob riot coming formally forward, presented her with the icy splendor of the cake!

The roof succeeded in remaining intact above the din which followed, but Maggie, gone suddenly delicious, sprang toward the footlights, executed a bow which bade fair to rival the toe turn in agility, then, exhausted by excitement and the fatigue of exertion, fell prone, a helpless, chocolate colored heap, on the boards of the stage.

Jasper's eyeballs well nigh started from their sockets at the sight. With a wild leap, accompanied by a wilder cry, he vaulted over chair back after chair back and reached the aisle. Down that he sped like mad, and with a nimbleness unexcelled by the nimblest of cake walkers he bounded to the stage, raised the prostrate form of the taker of the cake and pressed it to his heart.

Maggie's lids unclosed. With a sigh and a smile indicative of deep and unadulterated content she wound her olive arms about his neck and, drawing the dusk of his loving face down to hers, kissed it, while Frog Eyed Pete, who had successfully piloted her to fame and the winning of the prize, stood by, large eyed and sad, looking miserably on.

PROSPECT

FOR FAIR COAL PRICES MORE ENCOURAGING

Than Has Been Pictured Declares This Dispatch from New Straitsville. Mining in Ohio.

New Straitsville, O., Oct. 31.—Reports from mining regions in various parts of Ohio indicate considerable mining activity and show that the railroads are transporting all the coal that can be handled with the present equipment, which is the largest in their history. There has been an exodus of a few miners to other fields on account of the closing down of some of the smaller mines necessitated by the enormous capacity of these fields. The remaining miners, who constitute the vast majority of those formerly at work, are thus enabled to continue at work under normal conditions, although it is admitted that here are still too many men engaged in the industry in this state. No material loss of employment will follow the suspension of mining in the mines recently closed down, on account of the apportionment of work and the distribution of the miners, with the co-operation of interested corporations and the Ohio Mine Workers' Association, in Ohio and other coal states. The temporary disappointment occasioned in some quarters by the suspension of labor in a small percentage of Ohio fields, has disappeared, and it is evident, that the sensational publications regarding it have not been and will not be justified by events. Labor troubles are extremely improbable this year and the chances are that the supply of coal will be as great as possible in view of the demand, and the price not exorbitant through the winter. A conservative view of the future makes the prospect much more encouraging than it has been pictured.

The Stroll. Adown the road there slowly strolled A stripling and a lass, And who them indiscreet might hold That saw them thuswise pass? But as they onward gently drew And neared a glade, I wis, The distance now betwixt the two Waned somewhat like to this: Eftsoons, half hid from prying stares, As with the shade they merged (Perhaps it was from fear of bears!) Still more the pair converged: Until, as squirrels will indorse, By deeper gloom beset They farther wobbled in their course, And presently they met: And here, through heart magnanimous, Till end this little tale, With John and Mary strolling thus, Amidst the thick grown vale: —Life.

Who is this talking? This is F. H. Marcos.

That you, Mr. Marcos? Yes, Madam.

Have you HOME MADE candies today? Yes, ma'am! Don't you know I have a factory in the rear of my store where I make all my candies; in fact everything except the sugar? I have 12 boys and girls working day and night.

Is that so. I did not know that. I ordered some candies from you last Saturday and I thought they were HOME MADE because they were so nice and fresh. Now I want some more of them at 10 CENTS A POUND. How much do you want? I want 5 pounds.

Very well, Madam. Good bye.

Wait a minute, Mr. Marcos. I want to tell you something. I can't come to your store today. Can't you deliver them to me?

Yes, ma'am. Anything else you want?

No; that is all.

Thank you, I will send them at once. Good bye.

Good bye.

Eternal Woman.

"Remember," we say to the woman, "in business correspondence a short letter is regarded with most favor."

Thanking us, she begins writing. Some hours later she shows us the letter. For brevity it is commendable. A scant dozen words have sufficed. But the postscript to explain something omitted in the letter, occupies ten pages. Hastily we revise our advice, saying:

"It was our mistake. A short postscript is what we meant."—Judge.

Lots of Space Needed.

"Can't you keep that story of yours within a column?" asked the editor.

"I'm afraid I can't, sir," replied the reporter. "You see, it's a verbatim account, as you ordered, of what Mrs. Clesker said when interviewed regarding her defeat by Mrs. Blank for the Sunbeam club's presidency."—Syracuse Herald.

The well known R & O engineer, Wm. Duffy, moved his family from Shawnee to Newark on Friday and will take up his residence on Franklin street.

EMPLOYEE OF JEWETT CAR WORKS DOPED SATURDAY.

John Campbell who had been Robbed of $50 Found Unconscious on the Street.

Shortly after noon Saturday John Campbell, aged about 35, who is an employee of the Jewett Car Works, was found lying in a half-conscious condition on South Fifth street, evidently suffering from the effects of poison. McLaughlin's ambulance carried him to the City Hospital, where Dr. J. P. H. Stedem brought a stomach pump into requisition and brought him out of danger.

Campbell said his home was in New York City, and Saturday morning he drew $25.55 in wages. At the hospital he had $4, which he said was left out of about $50. He said he had been robbed and the police are inclined to believe that he was doped and his money stolen.

"CATCHING" COLD.

Why Some People Take Cold so Easily in the Fall.

A person doesn't take cold unless the vital power of the system is lowered. In the fall, with the changing weather, people whose blood has been overheated during the summer are in a weak condition and easily "catch" cold.

Father John's Medicine cures the cold by increasing the vitality. It fortifies the system against future attacks, throat and lung troubles, pneumonia and consumption. Take it after any exposure and you will never have a cold.

This remedy, prescribed by a doctor of the highest standing and eminence in his profession, for the late Rev. Father John O'Brien, fifty years ago, by whom it was recommended, and from whom it derived its name, is not a patent medicine; neither does it contain opium, morphine or any of the poisonous drugs found in over 80 per cent of the patent medicines and cough balsams.

While its formula is simple its ingredients are the most valuable and such as are prescribed by the leading physicians of the day to meet the requirements of the different organs of the body.

It cures the cold and builds you up at the same time because it is nourishment for the blood and nerves—prevents grip, pneumonia and consumption.

It is a Food medicine and makes strength—you can take it right along. The $1 bottles contain three times the quantity of the 50-cent size.

Father John's Medicine is sold at Collins' Drug Store North Third st.

THE NEW CONGRESS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES LARGER THAN ITS PREDECESSOR.

Familiar Faces Among the New Members—Veterans of the Civil War Still in Numbers—Why an Extra Session Has Been Called.

When congress assembles in extra session on Nov. 9 to consider the question of reciprocity with Cuba the chamber of the house of representatives will be taxed to its utmost capacity to seat the increased membership under the new apportionment, by which twenty-nine members have been added.

In the Fifty-eighth congress there will be 127 new members, ten of whom have served in some congress previous to the Fifty-seventh. Of these new members seventy-one are Democrats and fifty-six Republicans. There will also be three new delegates, Arizona sending John F. Wilson, a Democrat, who represented the territory in the Fifty-sixth congress; Oklahoma is to be represented by Bird S. Maguire, a Republican, and Prince Kuhle Kalkanapole is coming as a Republican to represent Hawaii.

For the first time since the Fifty-first congress the membership will be divided between Republicans and Democrats, no third party or fusion candidates having been elected. A number of the new members who have seen service in previous congresses are well known, the most prominent among them probably being John Lind of Minnesota. He served in the Fiftieth, Fifty-first and Fifty-second congresses as a Republican and was governor of Minnesota in 1890-91. He returns to the Fifty-eighth as a Democrat.

Illinois returns three former members, all of whom are well known—Billy Lorimer, the Chicago politician; William A. Rodenberg and Benjamin F. Marsh. Mr. Lorimer has served three terms in congress, but was defeated for the Fifty-seventh. Mr. Rodenberg was prominent in the Fifty-fifth, while Mr. Marsh returns after an absence of twenty years.

George F. Huff of Pennsylvania, who was last seen in the Fifty-fourth congress, has a place in political history as one of the famous "306" who followed the lead of Roseco Conkling in the memorable effort to renominate Grant for the presidency in 1880. The other members who have had previous experience in the house are J. S. Rhea of Kentucky, F. C. Talbott and J. W.

Overturf's Labor Record.

While N. F. Overturf, the Republican candidate for Senator in this district was drawing a salary of $5,000 a year as Probate Judge of Delaware county, he made the following record as a Congressman for Delaware city:
He opposed the proposed increase of the salary of Delaware's fire chief from $100 to $200.
He voted to reduce salaries of policemen from $1.75 to $1.50 per day.
He introduced and voted for a resolution reducing all street laborers from $1.35 per day to $1.25 per day.
This same resolution proposed to reduce teamsters from $3.50 per day to $2.75 per day.
Overturf both voted and worked for this reduction of the wages of laborers and teamsters.
While Overturf has this record for reducing the wages of laboring men, Mr. Gwynn, the Democratic candidate has a splendid record for increasing wages, when the increase was paid out of his own pocket.

Licking County Voters Should Not Be Fooled Again

For years the Republican scheme has been to spring some roorback just before election about some Democratic official, only to be dropped and never heard of again, after election. This scheme has been worked so often that it should cease to fool people.
But in any event not a single Democratic candidate on the ticket this year can be assailed on his own record. They are all worthy of public confidence, for they are men of strict integrity and will make efficient and popular officers.
There is no reason why Licking county should be misrepresented in the Legislature. W. D. Benner deserves to be elected for his merit. The wholesale use of money by the agents of Mark Hanna should not be allowed to thwart the will of the people. Vote for Benner.
If Newark is deprived of a representative on the Board of Commissioners every taxpayer and workman of the city will be certain to realize the disadvantage. Vote for Frank Showman.
The highest privilege and the greatest duty an American citizen has is the right to vote. Don't fail to exercise it next Tuesday.

Certainly Workmen Know Their Friend.

While Overturf, the Republican candidate for Senator in this district was drawing a salary of $5,000 a year as Probate Judge of Delaware county, he tried to reduce the wages of teamsters and laborers and other employees, while Mr. Gwynn, the Democratic candidate, has an unchallenged record for increasing the wages of all classes of workmen. Certainly the workmen of Newark know how to cast their ballots next Tuesday as between these two candidates, the Republican (candidate being their enemy and the Democratic candidate their friend.

Every candidate on the Democratic ticket deserves the hearty support of every Democrat in Licking county.

A vote for E. F. Gwynn, Democratic candidate for State Senator of this district, is a vote to retire Mark Hanna from the active management of Ohio affairs.

The Democratic county ticket this fall is exceptionally strong in point of ability and character, and should be elected by an exceptionally strong majority.

Voters of Newark should remember that unless they elect Frank Showman for County Commissioner this city will have no representative on the Board.

Don't let anything keep you away from the polls next Tuesday, fellow Democrats. Your work can be done some other day, but if you lose this chance to vote Tuesday you lose that vote forever.

Fellow Democrats, remember, that no real attack has been made or even attempted by the enemy upon a candidate on the county Democratic ticket this fall. Unfounded insinuations about the Democratic party do not warrant you if you are a Democrat, in scratching off Democratic candidates.

Frank Showman, Democratic candidate for County Commissioner, is a clean, honest, intelligent young man, who has the confidence of all who know him. He has the ability and the honesty to make a first-class Commissioner, and the people will see to it that he is triumphantly elected to that office.

That "stormy petrel" of politics, General Grosvenor, is out in his usual yearly ante election interview and prediction in regard to the result of the Ohio campaign. He only claims the Legislature by a majority of twenty on joint ballot. If that is all General Grosvenor claims for his party in the legislature, truthful people may expect the legislature to be Democratic.

Republican leaders from Mark Hanna down are trying to deceive the voters in this campaign by the false cry of "Single Tax." Single tax is not an issue in this campaign, and the Democratic party is not committed to it. The Democratic party in this campaign in Ohio is committed to just and honest taxation, while the Republican party opposes it, and that is the only single tax there is in the present campaign.

The Republican campaign this fall, as usual, has been a campaign of misrepresentation and falsehood. The Republican managers attempt to fight the campaign on false issues. They say the Democrats are single taxers, socialists and anarchists, not a word of which is true. They do not say, and cannot say, that just and honest taxation, and home rule, which the Democratic party advocates in this campaign are wrong. The enemy therefore, admits that both our candidates and our principles are right. Why should not every loyal Democrat stand by them next Tuesday?

Laboring Men, Vote for Your Friend.

Newark's teamsters, laborers, and all branches of workmen owe it to themselves to vote against their enemy for Senator in this district, Norman F. Overturf. They should put in their whole time and effort from now till the polls close on Tuesday evening to secure votes for their friend, Edward F. Gwynn.

HANNA'S REPUBLICANISM.

The junior senator from Ohio affects great distress of mind over what he styles a departure from Democratic principles by the present leaders of the party. With a voice choking with emotion he eulogizes the Democracy of Jefferson, Jackson and Tilden. He throws a few bouquets at Grover Cleveland, and then moans and walks at what he calls "the fads and isms of the new Democracy." How about the party of Fremont, Lincoln and Blaine? Has it, under Mr. Hanna's domination, remained true to its early traditions? Its first convention was held in 1856, when John C. Fremont was named for the Presidency. The cardinal principle of the platform of 1856 was:

"That the maintenance of the principles, promulgated in the Declaration of Independence and embodied in the federal constitution is essential to the preservation of our Republican institutions, and that Congress has power and it is its duty to prohibit in the territories (of the United States) those twin relics of barbarism, polygamy and slavery."

Did Mr. Hanna stand pat on that original Republican doctrine? If so, why did he not oppose the treaty which made the Sultan of Sulu an American dependent with the protected right to be and remain both a polygamist and a slave-holder? The Republican platform of 1856 was silent on the question of tariff reform, a gold standard or a ship subsidy bill, and therefore, according to the Senator's reasoning, his party should forever remain silent on those subjects, lest it wander from the teachings of the fathers and take on fads and isms. From the Republicanism of the anti-slavery men to the Republicanism of the ship subsidy schemers is a tremendous descent.

DEMOCRATIC LANDSLIDE

It Is Surely Coming In Ohio On Tuesday.

CHAIRMAN SALEN'S STATEMENT.

No Democrat Should Fail to Vote, For This Is the First State Election In Many Years In Which His Vote Will Count.

To the Democrats of Ohio:

After years of discouraging defeats, after campaign on campaign in which the party lacked the courage of aggressiveness or was disheartened by the impossibility of success, the Democracy of Ohio has this fall passed through a campaign in which every true member was summoned to action and thrilled by the brave leadership of Tom L. Johnson.

Hanna refused to debate because he dare not face the issues of the Democratic party—issues that applied to a state campaign, vital to every voter of Ohio. But Hanna was forced to show his "pat hand." The madder he got the more clearly he demonstrated that the "principles" which actuated the present management of the Republican party were Ship Subsidy, Railroad Franchises and the Fostering of Trusts—that it stood, in fact, for the one issue of making the rich richer and the poor poorer—that public office was a private grab.

If the Democrats of Ohio will turn out on Tuesday, there will be enough liberty-loving and self-respecting Republicans to join with them in the overthrow of the Hanna oligarchy in Ohio politics.
Put in a day at the polls on Tuesday.

PEOPLE WILL WIN THE FIGHT

Hanna and Ship Subsidy Steel Will Go Down in Defeat--Brief Resume of Campaign Which Will End Next Tuesday.

Tom L. Johnson, for the Democratic party, has led in a great fight for the rights of the people against Senator Hanna and the other false leaders of the Republican party. Mayor Johnson has gone before the people with plain, straightforward issues. He has made charges against Senator Hanna's public record that have not been denied. Senator Hanna, on the contrary, has made a campaign teeming with vilification of Mayor Johnson, and has not dared to answer the latter's charges. He has dragged from the tomb the mutilated body of the murdered president, William McKinley, and has endeavored to win votes by exposing the gaping wounds of the man whose assassination all citizens, Democrats and Republicans, deeply mourn.

Afraid to Debate.

Senator Hanna has refused to meet his opponent, John H. Clarke, in public debates on the issues of the campaign. Likewise, has the Republican candidate for governor run away from Mayor Johnson.

Monopoly vs. the People.

Mayor Johnson has conducted a campaign for Home Rule, Just Taxation, Two-Cent Steam Railroad Fare and the breaking up of the corrupt alliance that exists between certain Republican leaders and the privileged interests of the state. Senator Hanna has conducted a campaign for Columbus Rule of Local Communities, Unjust Taxation, Against Two-Cent Steam Railroad Fare, for the corrupt alliance between himself and the privileged interests and in favor of the ship subsidy bill as a steal, and Congressman Burton, of Cleveland, Hanna's home city, has denounced the ship subsidy bill as a steal, and for that reason the Republican committee has not assigned him to speak in the state campaign.

Ship Subsidy Steal.

Senator Hanna's chief work as United States senator has been for the ship subsidy bill, which would cost the people of Ohio nearly $10,000,000 a year and the people of the United States nearly $200,000,000. This vast sum Hanna would take from the people and turn it into the coffers of J. Pierpont Morgan and Hanna's friend, Griscom, president of the ship trust.

Protected Private Interests.

As United States senator, Hanna has taken good care of his private business interests, never hesitating to use his official power to that end.

Crime Against the People.

His greatest crime against the people of Ohio was when he used his power as senator to prevent his street railway monopoly from being taxed on the same basis as the property of home owners and farmers. His railroad in Cleveland is worth over $10,000,000. It is taxed for $1,000,000, or less than 10 per cent. of its value. Mayor Johnson's tax board increased the valuation to $5,500,000, or a little less than 60 per cent. Senator Hanna had the State Board of Equalization remit the increased valuation, thus throwing the burden upon the small property owners of Cleveland and Cuyahoga county and the balance of the state. Two months ago Hanna's road was consolidated with the other company, and it was turned in for $10,400,000. Hanna still retaining the majority of the stock.

Obstructed Three-Cent Fare.

Then to prevent the construction of a three-cent fare street railroad in Cleveland to compete with his five-cent monopoly Hanna tore down the Cleveland city government as well as the government of every city in the state.

"Boss" Cox's Plan.

He then had the legislature adopt the costly and corrupt "Boss" Cox plan of government, under which dishonest public officials can rob the taxpayers of thousands of dollars. This is in part Hanna's record, and for these shameful acts he asks the people of Ohio to endorse him.

Against Two-Cent Fare.

In the present campaign Hanna has declared emphatically against two-cent steam railroad fare, which would benefit all the people. He says the reduction in fare would lower the wages of the railroad men. The figures show that in New York and Michigan, where two-cent fare is required by law, the wages of the railroad men are higher than in Ohio. He brazenly asserts that if returned to the senate he will force through the ship subsidy steal at any cost.

Elected by Bribery.

Senator Hanna was elected to the United States senate through the most flagrant bribery ever perpetrated in the state of Ohio. Part was money bribery. Part consisted of federal jobs in a recent speech at Youngstown he gloated over the fact that he had given federal jobs to many of the members of the Ohio legislature, who had been "persuaded" to change their minds and vote for him.

To Steal the Canals.

In an effort to insure his reelection Senator Hanna has entered into another shameful conspiracy—this time with "Boss" Cox, the notorious politician, of Cincinnati. It is nothing less than a deal to steal the canals of Ohio worth millions of dollars for "Boss" Cox and his gang. This was Cox's price for his support of Hanna in this campaign. Unless the people of Ohio rise up and rebuke these unscrupulous political leaders, it is quite probable that this high-handed steal will be carried through within six months after the election.

Threatens the People.

Hanna has proclaimed from every stump that calamity will follow Democratic success in Ohio this fall. In other words, if he is not permitted to continue to manipulate the people in his own private interests he will destroy the prosperity of the country. He does not say that what little increase of wages now paid is more than eaten up by the increased cost of living. He does not explain why the steam railroads under Republican rule have already laid off 15 per cent. of their employees. He does not explain the cause of the recent big bank failures in Baltimore, Pittsburgh and other cities. Why do the steam railroads of Ohio evade nearly $5,000,000 every year?

Soft Coal Famine.

Nor does he explain why his soft coal trust will shortly lay its heavy hand upon the people of Ohio the same as was done last winter. Raise your voices for Hanna in November and his coal trust will raise your prices in December.

Johnson in Cuyahoga County.

Ordinarily the judgment of a man's neighbors is the best evidence of his worth. In Cuyahoga county where Hanna and Johnson are best known the people have sustained Mayor Johnson in five successive elections. Five times has Senator Hanna been repudiated. This should be a message to the people of Ohio. Mayor Johnson has won in Cleveland and Cuyahoga county against the heaviest odds ever encountered. Senator Hanna has used a corruption fund without limit. But the people of his home city could not be bought. His rebuke at the hands of Cuyahoga county's voters this fall will be administered in no uncertain manner.

"Boodle" the Argument.

Hanna this fall is using both boodle and threats. From the vast corruption fund contributed by the privileged interests who are exploiting the people Hanna is doling out contributions—under the guise of charity—to all the benevolent and charitable institutions of the state. When he thinks that he can gain the political support of high-minded people by this despicable method he insults the citizenship of the recipients. His agents are trying to coerce the workmen of the state to vote for him. Hanna threatens from the stump to take away their jobs if they don't. The Steel trust in Ohio, the Standard Oil trust and all the other trusts have enlisted under Hanna's banner because they recognize in him their champion.

Just a word about the Republican candidate for governor. He is also a monopolist like Senator Hanna. He is principal owner of the Cleveland Belt Line Steam railroad. Its value is over $1,000,000. It is listed for taxation on the Cuyahoga county duplicate for just $19,000.

Democratic Campaign Manly.

Mayor Johnson and John H. Clarke have conducted a straightforward and manly campaign, bringing a message of truth, plainly stated, to the people. Senator Hanna has conducted a campaign in the interests of monopoly and trusts and the ship subsidy steal. Will the people submit to further deprivation of their rights? The people's eyes are being opened to the facts. They realize that they are being imposed upon by the false leaders who are betraying the party of Lincoln.

The People Will Win.

This contest for the rights of the people was begun by Mayor Johnson three years ago. It will end on Nov. 3. The people will be victorious. They will come into their own.

SMASH THE COAL COMBINE.

If you want to help break up the unholy alliance between the Hocking Valley and the Ohio Central railroads and 16 of J. P. Morgan's coal mines in the Hocking valley, for which Myron T. Herrick was a dummy director last year, you should vote for Tom L. Johnson and the entire Democratic state and county ticket.

The more the people are informed as to the conduct of the shipbuilding trust, the less confidence they feel in the conduct of other great financial concerns.
New York City consumes 2,000,000 barrels of potatoes a year.

Eblen of Van Wert, O. Brother Eblen delivered an eloquent address on good of the order, and fully explained the plan of protection offered by the Home Guards of America, proving conclusively that it is second to none in the fraternal field. Sixteen candidates, eight ladies and eight gentlemen, were found in waiting and were led through the mysteries of the order, the beautiful ritualistic work being exemplified by the degree staff in full uniform, directed by Captain G. W. Brown. Fifteen members of Masking-gum Home No. 25 of Zanesville, were present, and were very enthusiastic in their praise of the manner in which the work was put on. Ten applications were received and referred, and after the conclusion of business, all adjourned to the banquet room where a fine spread was in waiting to which all did ample justice.

Nearly half a hundred Odd Fellows from Newark alone were in attendance, including the celebrated team of Olive Branch Lodge of Newark, which exemplified the second degree in excellent style. At the conclusion of the work refreshments were served at the Interurban hotel.

Modern Woodmen of America.

Becky Bell and all the young fellows were present at the meeting of Cedar Camp Wednesday evening. Fourteen applications were read and accepted, and T. S. Kane, T. W. Thomas, J. R. McKim and B. C. It was decided to hold an interest meeting on Thanksgiving evening at which time a good sized class will be initiated and the camp will serve their celebrated Woodman oyster sandwiches. Committees will at once be appointed to perfect arrangements. Cedar camp again leads the camps of the order in the state by taking the initial step in making preparations to send its celebrated Woodmen Forester team to St.

Louis to attend the national encampment of Forester teams to be held at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition during Woodman week. The fair committee has donated $3,000 prize money. Cedar Camp has also a fund at hand to send its team to attend the next encampment of Foresters at Milwaukee in June, 1905.

Rev. J. W. Maxwell will preach a sermon to the Woodmen and Royal Neighbors at the Christian Union church on Pine street tomorrow evening at 7 o'clock. All Modern Woodmen will meet at the Camp hall at 6 p. m., while Royal Neighbors will meet at the residence of Mrs. Markham on Marshall street.

SCHOOL LIFE IN TENTS

Scheme In Arizona to Build Up Health of Delicate Boys.

OUTDOOR WORK MIXED WITH STUDY

Steer Tying, Branding Contests, Hunting and Camping Some of the Features of an Institution Which Is Called a "Prep" School in the Open.

"Prep" school in the open—each young fellow possessing his own tent, horse, seven dogs, if so inclined; study punctuated with hunting and camping trips to the mountains, mines, Indian reservations, steer tying and branding contests, prehistoric ruins and the big horse ranches, almond orchards and orange groves that are marked features of the Salt river valley, Arizona—this is the latest addendum to the popular desert camp life which is proving such a boon to people who need the outdoor living to build them up, says a dispatch from Tucson to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Boys temporarily disabled by over-zeal in study or athletics; pale, weak and anemic, yet anxious to keep up their class work, have found an al fresco school life where development of brawn goes on with that of the brain an attractive and delightful prescription for "how to get strong" and be contented while getting so.

One of the young fellows, just out of high school, who went last year from the east profited so well by his year's experience in self reliance and the ability to fend for himself that at the close of the school year in May last he started, with only his saddle and pack horses for company, for the long overland trip across the desert, through the "range" country and over the Rockies to Denver, cooking and caring for himself on the way. He returns this fall—brown, robust, keen witted—ready for another year that will fully re-establish his health and at the same time finish his preparation for one of the eastern colleges.

The mise en scene of this queerest of schools is an interesting one. It is situated on the very edge of the desert, near the little city of Mesa, which was first reclaimed from purely desert about twenty-five years ago by the Mormons, who were the pioneers in opening up these pleasant lands to civilization. On the east are the Superstition hills, around which cluster so many Indian legends and so many tales of lost mines. Off toward the north rise the Mogollon and San Francisco ranges, and in the distance Four Peaks looms up, whose snow clad summits are the rancher's weather bureau, which he consults to ascertain whether the valley is to have a plentiful supply of water. Nearer by is the red Mountain of McDowell, where General Crook and his followers fought and finally overcame the wild Apaches, and to the south Twin Buttes and the distant hills of Sacaton.

For the boy with archaeological or ethnological predilections this section offers a fascinating field for private exploration and study. In every direction rise well defined prehistoric mounds, filled with countless pieces of pottery, broken to be sure, but with colors and patterns perfectly bright and clearly defined; shell and bone amulets, arrow points of obsidian and flint, bits of turquoise, charred corn cobs and stone implements galore—all relics of that skillful, industrious, provident race that dwelt in southern and central Arizona centuries ago, but vanished, leaving no history of where it came from or the cause of its disappearance. Here, too, are the pictured rocks, their colors still as fresh as when the prehistoric artist depicted on these tables of stone strange birds and animals long since extinct.

Five miles away lies Los Muertos, the fields of the dead, partially unearthed by the Cushing expedition in 1889. This was one of the largest of these ancient cities whose population, prior possibly to the pharaohs or Roman kings, has been estimated at more than 65,000. All about in the desert are the ruined corals or stock pens in which the llamas and other animals of the inhabitants were kept, while the irrigating canals still in use are the splendidly built prehistoric ones, simply cleaned out and repaired by the thrifty ranchmen of today.

DEATH

OF MRS. FRANK J. SODER AT THE CITY HOSPITAL.

Three Weeks Ago Mrs. Soder Fell Down Cellar and Thursday Submitted to Operation.

Mrs. Katherine Soder, wife of Frank J. Soder, a B. & O. engineer of 25 Holiday street, died at the City Hospital at 5:40 o'clock Friday evening as the result of a surgical operation performed on Thursday morning.

Mrs. Soder, about three weeks ago, met with an accident at her home, falling down the cellar steps and sustaining a severe hernia. She received attention, but became worse until it was decided that an operation was the only chance she had to recover.

The deceased was the daughter of Patrick and Catherine Egan and was born in Hanover 42 years ago. She was married in 1884, to Mr. Frank Soder, who with eight children, the youngest being not yet 3 years old, survive. The children are: Maude, John, Frank, Edward, James, Clarence, Raymond and Harold.

TONIGHT

The Bostonians Will be Seen at the Auditorium—Robin Hood the Attraction.

One of the most brilliant audiences that ever gathered in a New York theatre, greeted the Bostonians on Sept. 1st at the Academy of Music. It was a gala night, the occasion being the quarter centennial of the famous organization. Mirth, sentiment, laughter and tears were mingled together during the festive evening—for it was indeed one of festivities. Not that it has ever been the attempt or desire of the Bostonians to provoke tears, but there are times when the heart overflows at a retrospective glance of a long career of melody and laughter.

On that night when thousands of old and new friends greeted the veterans Barnabee, MacDonald, Frothingham, Studley and Bacon—the last named of the business department—thoughts of glorious conquests in days ago came spontaneously to those on both sides of the footlights. It was no wonder, then, when Musical Director Samuel L. Studley led the orchestra in Auld Lang Syne, that Barnabee, MacDonald and Frothingham, and two male veterans in the chorus, were much broken up. It was not at all surprising when Col. Henry Watson, the godfather of the Bostonians, spoke vividly of past scenes, faces and conquests, that tears trickled down the face of Studley; it was not to be wondered at that Barnabee, the grand old man of comic opera, should bow his head and sigh retrospectively; that MacDonald should clear his throat from the lumps that would insist upon rising; and that Frothingham, Miller and Dale should occasionally rub their eyes and "ahem" a bit. But it is only on such sentimental occasions that the traditional members are recalled; for in this day much better is demanded. That is why "new blood" has been infused into the company, and why a man with such a standing in the musical world as London G. Charlton was chosen as managing director. In many respects the company is stronger than it ever was before. All that money and the wide experience and great influence of Messrs. Charlton, Barnabee and MacDonald can secure from the dramatic and musical fields, were taken advantage of, with the result that there has never been a comic opera company—not excepting the earlier days of the Bostonians when they won their fame—that contains the voices now to be heard with the Bostonians. With all imagination and sentiment thrown aside, and justice granted, the patrons of the Auditorium will agree with this statement when the Bostonians will appear here tonight.

HUMAN SKELETON

Found Buried Three Feet Deep on the Site of Old Tavern Near Hanover From Which a Stockman Mysteriously Disappeared Many Years Ago.

S. H. Shafer of Black Hand, while driving to Newark Saturday morning, was apprised of a ghastly find made by workmen who were excavating gravel from a hill alongside the road between Newark and Hanover, a short distance west of the latter place. The find was a human skeleton, which was buried about 3 feet from the surface of the hill.

The place where the skeleton was found was the site, years ago, of an inn known as the Williams tavern, and there is a legend that while this hostelry was in use, a stockman disappeared, and was never afterward heard of. Many believe that the skeleton may be the remains of this unfortunate stockman, who was thought to have been robbed and murdered.

Joseph and His Cookbook

JOSEPH was an excellent cook, but he was not what might be called an accomplished literary man. At the same time he conceived the idea that a cookery book from his pen would fill a long felt want. He set to work; but, feeling that perhaps he had made some mistakes in composition, he submitted the work to a prominent literary critic, who promised to go through the work and correct it where necessary.

After a day or two, he brought it back.

"Yes," he said; "it's all right so far as I can see, but I rather fancy you've been a little superfluous in your recipe for lemon pudding."

"Have I? How's that?"

"Well, you see, you say here, 'Then sit on a hot stove and stir constantly.' Now, I really do not see how any one is going to sit on a hot stove without stirring constantly, so I think you can do without that sentence, don't you know?"

THE TRAINED NURSE'S STORY

[Original.]

How is it that I studied to be a trained nurse and never took but one case? I will tell you. A few days after receiving my diploma I was at the hospital from which I had been graduated. While there a sudden call came for a nurse. None of the regular nurses could be spared, but the inquirer was informed that a recent graduate who had yet to take her first case was ready to respond. The parties were obliged to be satisfied with this, and I was engaged.

I found my patient surrounded by every luxury. A venerable lady received me and told me that her son was to be nursed through a case of fever. Upon going into the sick room I saw a man apparently about forty whose case had just been diagnosed as one of typhoid. As I was in uniform, I had only to begin my watch.

My patient never complained, no matter how he suffered, and at the slightest approach of relief would make light of his condition, which, I knew well, was very serious. I made several mistakes, one of which was apparent to the sufferer and resulted seriously to him. Nevertheless he prevented the doctor from knowing that I was the cause, sending me away when he next called and explaining his condition in his own way.

But this is not the story. One night when he was passing the crisis I stepped into the hall. It was between 1 and 2 o'clock. I was surprised to find that the light always kept there was not burning. While I was wondering at this a bright light shone full in my face, and a masked man behind it came toward me. I thought, only of my patient, who, the doctor had assured me, was hovering between life and death and could bear no shock. Two frights cannot occupy the mind at the same moment. At any rate, I stepped forward to meet him, putting my finger to my lips.

"There's a man near to death in that room," I whispered, pointing. "Go downstairs, and I'll help you all I can."

The man motioned for me to go downstairs before him, then followed me to the library below. When we reached it I found the gas burning and, turning to the man, saw him clutching a revolver, which was pointed directly at me.

"Turn over the plate," he said, "and I'll get out, but I warn you if you play any game, you're a dead woman."

Now, the plate had always been taken at night to the room occupied by my patient. I would have discontinued the practice, but he would not permit, and it was there now. I told the burglar that, being a stranger in the house, I could only help him find it and began a pretended search, when he stopped me, telling me that the silver was always taken upstairs, and either I should go and get it or he would seek for it in the sick room.

What could I do? I promised to go and get it for him while he watched me from the landing. What a position! I was obliged to steal the plate, and if the patient saw me he might believe himself in the hands of a thief. Nevertheless I went into the room, leaving the door open, as directed, to bring the plate. My patient seemed to be in a doze. I opened the closet door in which it was kept, keeping my eyes fixed on the sleeper, if he was not rather in coma than asleep. The plate was kept in a large morocco covered box, and I took it out and was midway between the closet and the door when he opened his eyes and looked straight at me. That was the moment of supreme terror of my life.

"What are you doing?" he asked feebly.

"I need a few articles in this box," I said. "I will take them out downstairs and bring it back."

There must have been a guilty look on my face rather than a frightened one, for he looked at me with as severe expression as his condition would admit, then, with a groan, turned his face away. There was nothing for me to do but to carry the box to the burglar. He transferred its contents to a bag he carried, then, opening a closet, told me to go into it. In vain I begged to be permitted to go back to my patient, assuring the man that without my care he might die before morning. All in vain. The brute declared that he would not trust me lest I give an alarm and thrust me in the closet.

What I endured there till I heard the butler setting the table for breakfast no one but myself knows, and I could never transfer the experience to another. When I was let out the servant started back as if he had seen a ghost. There was a mirror in the buffet, and as I came before it I stood wondering whose was the reflection in it with features not unlike mine and hair white as snow.

I had presence of mind to telephone for a nurse, then told the butler to go to the patient's room and see if he were alive. He did so and came back to say that his master wanted me to come to him. I waited till the nurse came and sent her in to him to say that I had been worn out with watching and was resting.

When I saw my patient again he was convalescent. He had been prepared for everything, but when he saw my white hair he groaned.

"You have saved my life," he said, "and it belongs to you. You must stay here as long as you live."

This was all the wooing I got till he was well, when he made up for the matter of fact manner of his proposal and has been making up for it ever since.

DEATH

Of Mrs. Rebecca Firestone Occurred, North of Newark, Early Saturday Morning.

Mrs. Rebecca Firestone, relict of the late David Firestone, died at her home in the "Opposom Hollow," two miles north of Newark at 3.15 a. m. Saturday, after a lingering illness.

Mrs. Firestone was a daughter of the late William Horn, a pioneer miller of Licking county, who many years ago conducted a mill two miles north of Newark. Through her father's family she was a descendant of the Prussian nobility. She was one of twelve children, ten of whom lived to a ripe old age. Four sisters Mrs. Henry Kathbone of West Newark; Mrs. Sarah Eitter of South Newark; Mrs. Amanda Anderson of Columbus, and Mrs. Charlotte Stoner of Minneapolis, Minn., survive her. The deceased was born in Franklin township, Licking county, Ohio, May 8, 1824, and was married to David Firestone, Esq., December 9, 1855. Two children were the fruit of this union, William Firestone, who was killed in a B & O wreck September 27, 1890, and Mrs. Mary E. Barnett, who lives in the old homestead. Mrs. Firestone had lived in the old home where she died for 57 years continuously. Early in life she joined the M. E. church, but in late years she became a member of the Christian Union church.

The funeral services will take place on Monday at 1 o'clock from her late home and the interment will be in the Barnes cemetery.

Mrs. Firestone was a woman of strong traits of character, and adorned the various relations of daughter, wife and mother with rare fidelity and devotion.

Habifax N. S., Oct. 10.—The declaration that the existing relations between Canada and Great Britain cannot exist much longer is being taken up by the Halifax Chronicle, which alone newspaper in the province has the courage to do so. It is the only paper in the empire, acknowledging that the King of England is not the King of Canada, and that the status of an independent nation is being lost.

The paper says there is much to be done at the latter step in particular, and that the world owes Canada from the day of her birth a debt which is being embroidered with the thread of the Statute on account of its costliness, and at the same time weakens the dominion the benefit of which is being enjoyed by the protection of the Monroe doctrine.

INVALIDS IN AMERICA.

Woman Physician Says the Country Is Full of Them.

At the afternoon session of the seventh annual convention of the New York State Assembly of Mothers, which was recently opened in Syracuse, in the midst of a raging storm, 500 mothers were in their places to hear Mrs. Mara L. Pratt Chadwick, M. D., of New York, author of histories and stories for children, tell them plain truths concerning motherhood, says the New York World.

Mrs. Chadwick figuratively placed a child on the dissecting table. There were the tooth cutting period, the growing tall period, the growing stout period, the memory period and the periods of imitation, imagination and reason. Bringing him up through childhood to adolescence, Dr. Chadwick said, was a great task. "But," she went on, "the adolescent period is the time upon which all the future depends. America is a country full of invalids. The real splendid healthy woman is almost extinct."

In her annual address, Mrs. David O. Meers, president of the New York State Assembly of Mothers, said that the chief extension of the work had been the introduction of a child study department in the 400 granges in the state, thereby reaching the mothers of the country directly. The assembly now aims, she said, to get into closer relations with the public schools and is working to that end.

HIS IDEA OF CHILDREN.

Chicago University Professor Believes in Quality, Not in Quantity.

Three notable addresses were delivered before the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs at Cairo, Ill., the other day. Wilbur S. Jaekman, dean of the school of education of Chicago university, discussed the "Ideal School." He criticized the bare, ugly schoolrooms that stand out in marked contrast to our modern churches, clubrooms, lodge halls and public buildings and the poor ventilation in the schools. Referring to the subject of race suicide, he said:

"The ideal school will be somewhat expensive, but you must afford the money or you must not have the children. The highest evolution is in quality, not quantity. I am not particularly disturbed by the hysteria of our strenuous friends regarding race suicide. In the course of evolution I believe that the race has passed through and beyond the stage of the rabbit and the rat. I am reminded of the fable of the owl and the eagle. The former upbraided the latter for having but two young ones while she herself had four. 'Yes,' replied the eagle, 'but mine are eagles.' I believe that the race needs eagles."

WAVES GAVE UP DIAMOND.

Property of Atlantic City Physician Recovered at Pennsylvan.

Dr. John M. Sumnerill of Pennsylvan, on the New Jersey coast, while walking along the shore the other morning, found a necktie in which was a diamond pin. The tie and pin belonged to Dr. Albert D. Cuskaden of Atlantic City.

On Sunday, Oct. 18, while the wind was blowing very hard, both doors of the pilot house on the launch Widgeon, Dr. Cuskaden's boat, were blown open and the wind carried out the tie, which was hanging in the pilot house. When the boat reached New Castle, Dr. Cuskaden wired back that he had lost the pin and offered a reward.

Since that time the shore had been crowded at low water by people searching for the gem, but it had eluded the eyes of all until Dr. Sumnerill spied it among a lot of weeds and grass.

Winning of a Marlborough Check.

The persistence of some painters is proved by a story that is going the rounds of the London studios, says the New York Press. A young artist, poor and unknown, boasted in a crowd of his fellows that he would paint the portrait of one of the twelve leading women in London within a year. There were many takers of the bet. The artist took the next train for Blenheim palace, where the young Duchess of Marlborough was staying. Note after note was sent to her, but the artist received no reply. One day he bribed the gardener with a couple of shillings to let him enter by a hedge. When he was in the garden the former Miss Vanderbilt appeared. He jumped from behind a lilac bush, said he was struggling and poor and begged permission to paint her portrait. The duchess laughed and said she could not spare the time for posing. Then she added that if he left some finished work with her agent in London she would leave a check. It is said of the persistent youth that if he did not paint the Marlborough portrait he at least received a Marlborough check.

Told to Face the Face Solemnly.

Representative Henry S. Bontell of Illinois, one of the bright men who represents a Chicago district, was recently in Washington and was asked if he intended to remain until congress met.

"No," he replied. "I have a number of things to look after at home; besides, I have to deliver several orations. I believe that is what they are called. Regarding one of these occasions, I had a letter from a friend who was one of the managers of the affair which said, 'Harry, this is a farce, but you can't be too solemn about it.'"

LADY CONSTANCE MACKENZIE TYPICAL HIGH AND LASS.

LADY CONSTANCE MACKENZIE.

London, Oct. 31.—Lady Constance Mackenzie, who is soon to become Lady Constance Fitzgerald, is one of the popular Scotch ladies of society. In her veins flows the bluest of highland blood and she is very proud of her highland ancestors. She is heir to the title of countess of Cromartie, one of the most ancient of Scottish titles, which is now held by her sister.

Lady Constance, who is but 21 years old, has become famous through her aquatic feats and has for years held the challenge shield of the Bath club, the championship emblem for women swimmers. It is said that there is no professional woman swimmer in the world who could hold her own with this amateur. Her fiancé, Capt. Fitzgerald, of the 11th Hussars, is an Irishman and a great lover of outdoor sports.

WENT TO SEE SIGHTS OF THE METROPOLIS AT 102

New York, Oct. 31.—One year ago Mrs. Mary Sheppard, 102, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., was induced in that city to take a ride in an automobile. The experience fired in her an ambition to see as many of the wonders of the age as possible before her death. So the other day, a quaint little figure in a black skirt, shawl and hood slipped quietly into the metropolis to take a look at the Brooklyn Bridge, skyscrapers and subway through eyes dim with the use of over a century. She enjoyed everything. "This trip has made me young again," she said. She has been a widow 50 years and has one son.

HIGH CLASS DRUGGISTS AND — OTHERS.

The better class of druggists, everywhere, are men of scientific attainments and high integrity, who devote their lives to the welfare of their fellow men in supplying the best of remedies and purest medicinal agents of known value, in accordance with physicians' prescriptions and scientific formula. Druggists of the better class manufacture many excellent remedies, but always under original or official names and they never sell false brands, or imitation medicines. They are the men to deal with when in need of anything in their line, which usually includes all standard remedies and corresponding adjuncts of a first-class pharmacy and the finest and best of toilet articles and preparations and many useful accessories and remedial appliances. The earning of a fair living, with the satisfaction which arises from a knowledge of the benefits conferred upon their patrons and assistance to the medical profession, is usually their greatest reward for long years of study and many hours of daily toil. They all know that Syrup of Figs is an excellent laxative remedy and that it gives universal satisfaction, and therefore they are selling many millions of bottles annually to the well informed purchasers of the choicest remedies, and they always take pleasure in handing out the genuine article bearing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package. They know that in cases of colds and headaches attended by biliousness and constipation and of weakness or torpidity of the liver and bowels, arising from irregular habits, indigestion, or over-eating, that there is no other remedy so pleasant, prompt and beneficial in its effects as Syrup of Figs, and they are glad to sell it because it gives universal satisfaction.

Owing to the excellence of Syrup of Figs, the universal satisfaction which it gives and the immense demand for it, imitations have been made, tried and condemned, but there are individual druggists to be found, here and there, who do not maintain the dignity and principles of the profession and whose greed gets the better of their judgment, and who do not hesitate to recommend and try to sell the imitations in order to make a larger profit. Such preparations sometimes have the name—"Syrup of Figs"—or "Fig Syrup"—and of some piratical concern, or fictitious fig syrup company, printed on the package, but they never have the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of the package. The imitations should be rejected because they are injurious to the system. In order to sell the imitations they find it necessary to resort to misrepresentation or deception, and whenever a dealer passes off on a customer a preparation under the name of "Syrup of Figs" or "Fig Syrup," which does not bear the full name of the California Fig Syrup Co. printed on the front of the package, he is attempting to deceive and mislead the patron who has been so unfortunate as to enter his establishment, whether it be large or small, for if the dealer resorts to misrepresentation and deception in one case he will do so with other medicinal agents, and in the filling of physicians' prescriptions, and should be avoided by every one who values health and happiness. Knowing that the great majority of druggists are reliable, we supply the immense demand for our excellent remedy entirely through the druggists, of whom it may be purchased everywhere, in original packages only, at the regular price of fifty cents per bottle, but as exceptions exist it is necessary to inform the public of the facts, in order that all may decline or return any imitation which may be sold to them. If it does not bear the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, do not hesitate to return the article and to demand the return of your money, and in future go to one of the better class of druggists who will sell you what you wish and the best of everything in his line at reasonable prices.

STRONG TESTIMONY

This is Newark Testimony and Will Stand Investigation.

If you doubt the following and wish to investigate, you haven't to go to some other state in the Union to prove it. It's not a long story published in Newark newspapers about a resident in Kalamazoo, Mich. or Tampa, Fla. It's about a resident in Newark and given in his own words. No stronger proof can be had.

C. L. Wines, 235 Elm street, says:—"I had more or less trouble with my kidneys. I need not dwell on the symptoms. It is enough to say that I suffered, was nearly helpless and could get nothing to help until I got Dean's Kidney Pills at Grayton's drug store. I happened to read in one of the local papers something pertaining to them, and I went there and got some. I was much surprised at the quickness of the relief they gave and I have told lots of other people about them."

CARE OF THE CHILD

How It Adds to Its Health and Comfort

THE two babies set side by side on the nursery floor, on a warm day in summer. Both were plump, sweet and bright for their ages, but close observation showed that while one child played contentedly with its toes the other soon began to wriggle and act as if it were very uncomfortable. These performances ended in a roar of such volume that the mother hastily snatched up the uncomfortable youngster, exclaiming in annoyance: "Oh, what a bad temper my little Peter has! How I wish he would sit quietly and play like your sweet little Marion!" Marion's mother smiled quietly. "Will you let me see how you have dressed your baby?" she said.

Examination revealed the fact that poor little Peter was first confined in a wide flannel band pinned very tightly. Then there was a knitted shirt over the arms and high in the neck. Then the heavy flannel pinning blanket was fastened on by means of another tight band about the upper part of the waist. In addition to this, the poor child had a flannel petticoat fastened with still another band, and over all there came the dress, very long and covered with heavy tucking and embroidery.

The contented baby, on the other hand, thanks to her sensible mother, was dressed in this wise. First she wore a band of raw silk, then a pinning blanket of fine flannel plainly made and attached to a waist of thin cambric, in order to have all, even of that light weight, depend from the shoulders. Then came the simplest of little dress slips, edged only with fine thread lace.

Indeed, the tendency now is to dress the child as lightly as possible. It is as bad for the child to be overdressed as it is for a grown person. The newest little flannel petticoat for a baby is made like a princess slip, the upper part being of cambric. It is without gathered fullness and fastens on the shoulder with two narrow straps, each having a buttonhole and a button. Thus whatever weight there is comes from the shoulders.

The young child is merely a little animal which must be allowed to sleep and eat as much as possible and be perfectly comfortable in order that it may have a chance to grow strong rapidly. The notion of having the baby for show and dressing it up in frills and ribbons is one that has entirely gone out of style, which is a good thing, as it was a most unnatural and silly idea.

The modern baby's day is about as follows: At 6 it awakes after a sound night's rest, due to regularity in the bedtime routine. It is given an early breakfast of milk and lime-water and is then taken out by its nurse in the baby carriage. Until half past 9 it inhales the fresh morning air, and then it is brought home to have its regular breakfast of milk, in which some simple, easily digested cereal has been put, or, if the child is old enough, it can eat mush and milk. Then follows an hour's romp, and at 11 o'clock the bath, which forms perhaps the most important event of the day. First, standing on the bath rug, baby's little gums, by means of a tiny wad of medicated cotton, are washed with boracic acid diluted into a weak solution. The little nose and also the eyes are thus treated. Then the baby is sponged and soaped on its fat little stomach and back, and last it is popped into the lukewarm water or its little tub to splash around happily for ten minutes. This part of the performance may be enlivened if toys of the floating variety are allowed in the water with the child. The bath then becomes an agreeable occasion and one to be looked forward to. After the bath comes a nap of two hours, and then the child's dinner, at which it may be given the folk of a soft boiled egg or a little meat juice. Then it is tucked into its little carriage and stays out all the afternoon until about 6 o'clock. In warm weather it may be given another bath at this hour. Next comes the supper of mush and milk, and then bed at about 7.

Under no circumstances should the routine of a child's life be interrupted or changed. It is regularly above all else which insures good health and good temper on the part of your baby, and you should remember that.

CHAMPION OF A RIVER.

Clubwoman Would Restore the Chicago to Its Former Beauty.

"It was born of the wide western plain, reared in the freedom of the endless prairie and flowered peacefully and with dignity by the tide of the aborigine, who admitted its beauty and let that beauty develop.

"It truly is a Cinderella of rivers—of noble birth, now made to drudge and slave in the dust and ashes of the city."

No one may recognize it from the description, but the Chicago river is meant. The characterization is that of a Chicago clubwoman, Mrs. Kate S. Woods, says the Chicago Tribune.

The river has been abused. There is no doubt of that in Mrs. Woods' mind, for she declares the city has been ungrateful and has chided where the aborigine lauded.

"For almost thirty years after his coming," she says, "the white man found that the natural course of the river did not run counter to his. Soon, however, the new city became a harsh stepmother, and the Cinderella of rivers was sent to work in the dirt and soot of manufacturing hearth."

It is sad for even a river to have to work, Mrs. Woods contended. But worse than that is the ingratitude of Chicago. So appealing was the plea for the river and so harsh was the arraignment of the city that an auditor proposed the organization of a society for the prevention of cruelty to the Chicago river. The city is cruel, for:

"We never gave this Cinderella a chance to put on new or bright raiment. We never gave her a chance even to wash her face until the drainage canal went through, and that was merely for the sake of ourselves, not to enhance the beauty of the river."

"How good the river has been to all of us and how little we appreciate it! It is despised, neglected and overworked. It is used as a dump, a ditch and even as an open sewer. Men stop its current with big, cumbersome tunnels below and span it with unsightly bridges above; they stick ugly piles and piers in it; they make it mathematically straight and inartistic and then throw up their hands in astonishment, crying, 'How ugly, what an abomination!'"

"There is hope for the future," Mrs. Woods held. "Let us each be a fairy to bring Cinderella back to her own, the Cinderella which has drudged for us for seventy years."

JERRY SIMPSON OUTDONE.

A Kansas Statesman Discards Socks and Takes Red Hair as Issue.

Representative Victor Murdock, the newly elected member of congress from "Socksless" Jerry Simpson's district in Kansas, is attracting much attention at Washington, says the Chicago Inter Ocean.

Mr. Simpson is supposed to have gained many votes on the socks issue, but Mr. Murdock made his campaign chiefly on the red hair issue.

Mr. Murdock's hair is very red. Prior to the holding of the district convention, that nominated him for congress to succeed Mr. Long there was a big field of candidates, Murdock and one other having red hair. The other red haired candidate entered into an alliance with Murdock by which it was agreed that after the pre-convention campaign had progressed long enough to determine which red haired man was the more popular the losing candidate before the public should withdraw in favor of the other.

Murdock won. He told the people of Kansas from the stump that the red haired men were a considerable part of the population and that they should be represented in congress. He was nominated and elected.

Church That Likes Ragtime Music.

Ragtime is now played in the Forty-eighth Street Baptist church in Chicago. You can also play chess, checkers or dominos in the church at any hour of the day and at almost any hour of the night. The pastor's parlor and dining room are as open as the church, and each evening the young people gather there at a piano and play and sing "How much wood would a woodchuck chuck if a woodchuck could chuck wood?" "My Kongo Lady" and other ragtime songs. The pastor, Homer M. Cook, likes the music of the piano, and he encourages the young people to use it. He lives in the church with his wife.

Sweet Cider Dreams.

The dapper waiter lingers:
What shall I drink tonight?
I turn, with listless fingers,
The wine list to the light,
And while I scan it, thinking
That wine has lost its charm,
I dream once more of drinking
Sweet cider at the farm.

From granddad's ancient settle,
Before the crackling blaze,
I watch the singing kettle:
A merry tune it plays.
There, when the corn was snapping,
And apples sized and steamed,
With granddad slyly napping,
My sweetest dreams were dreamed.

The winter wind, snow laden,
Coaxed up the roaring flames,
And there a rosy maiden
Sat by and played me games:
There love, who heard the clinking
Of glasses, came and saw
Two happy lovers drinking
Sweet cider through a straw.

Sung sheltered from the weather,
At Boreas we laughed
And quenched our thirst together
In that cool amber draft.
That drink of granddad's making,
Pressed in the mill hard by,
Set no light heart to aching,
Turned no bright speech awry.

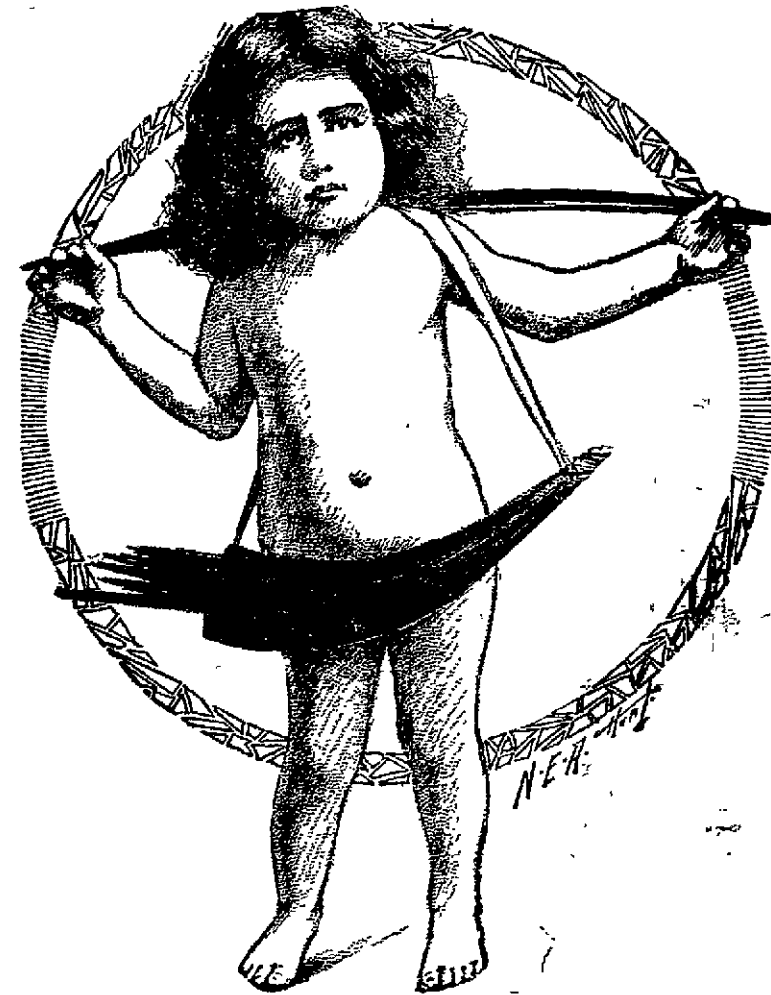

Stilled are the clinking glasses;
Long vanished is your smile,
Oh, rosiest of lasses!
But still I dream, and while
My gray mustache I'm slipping
In wine without a flaw
I see your red lips sipping
Sweet cider through a straw

LITTLE MAIDEN WILL BE CUPID OF THE CARNIVAL

St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 31.—St. Paul is to have a carnival and instead of a carnival queen, the "younger folk" will be given a show. This year there is to be a "Cupid of the carnival," and three-year-old Florentine Marie Frank has been chosen for that honor. Her parents live in Garfield street.

DENVER GIRL WENT DIZZY ROUNDS WITH BOGUS PRINCE

THE FORMER PRINCESS VOIRO-VAROTSKY.

Denver, Col., Oct. 31.—Mrs. Effie Cook, divorced wife of a local druggist, returned to this city recently as the divorced wife of one Prince Panay G. Viouro-Varonsky. She says that the Prince turned out to be an impostor, but traveled about with her under one name or another, raising funds in many American cities by liberal use of his wits, and then jumping to another place when things got too hot for him. She finally decided to drop him, but adds: "But I will say for him, he bought me more dresses than I ever had in my life, if I could only have held on to them."

LOVE IS BLIND

By Martha McCulloch-Williams

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

John Haley came down the back steps, the model and pattern of angry dejection. At sight of him Mrs. Corson frowned. She did not need to be told her daughter Helen had refused Johnny's hand for the eleventh time.

Mrs. Corson wanted Johnny in the family. He was such an all round good fellow and well to do, to say nothing of how beautifully his farm dovetailed with the Corson acres. When he came abreast of her she could not help saying, "Well, of all idiots in the world you and Helen are certainly the most idiotic."

"I have been a fool," Johnny admitted savagely, "letting a girl keep me dangling after her five years. Helen wasn't fifteen."

"She has less than the sense of fifteen now, and so have you," Mrs. Corson interrupted impatiently. "You SOBBING OUT HER LOVE AND PENITENCE have stuffed her head so full of novels and poetry she's clean beyond plain, everyday common sense."

"How can I help it?" Johnny said in a voice of deep injury. "I didn't know. I wanted only to show her I was liberal."

"Oh, you are imbecile!" Mrs. Corson broke in. "As if that would go with a high strung girl! Of course Helen wants her own way—and gets it most of the time. But she thinks she wants to make great and solemn sacrifices for the man she loves. If she can't do that she can't love him. If you were to have smallpox or lose your farm or break your back—anything, indeed, but break your neck—she'd want to marry you out of hand."

"Think so?" Johnny asked, grinning faintly.

"I don't think—I know!" Mrs. Corson retorted confidently.

"I reckon I am stupid; seems like I ain't had my right senses except in horse trading never since I've been courting Helen," Johnny said, the grin deepening.

"Oh, go along home!" Mrs. Corson retorted. Johnny stood for a minute like one lost in thought, then squared his shoulders, brought his heels well together, said in a loud, strained voice: "Goodby, ma'am. I'll write. You're mighty near all the mother I've ever known. I'll never forget your goodness whether I fetch up in South Africa or the Klondike. No, I shan't come over again. The sooner I'm off the better." Then in a quick, husky whisper, as he bent to kiss her cheek, "You listen out for accidents about day after tomorrow."

Perhaps Johnny did not know the obdurate Miss Helen was standing at the window, well screened by the venetian blinds. He mounted his horse and rode off furiously. As the noise of hoofs died away Mrs. Corson sighed deeply, saying as though to herself: "Poor boy! It hurts me to think of him wandering all over the face of the earth."

"Don't worry, ma," Helen said, flinging open the blinds. "Johnny is not the stuff that makes heroes or martyrs or even travelers. Poor Johnny! If only he was not so hopelessly commonplace I'd marry him—to please you and pa."

"You're thrown away the chance and a mighty good chance," Mrs. Corson said, sighing and shaking her head. Helen laughed merrily. "Why, I can marry him when I please."

She spoke with the conscious power of youth and beauty. Judge then her state of astonishment and despair a week later when she found herself beseeching Johnny to make her his wife and meeting with refusals as steadfast as they were quiet. There had been a serious accident. Johnny was home again, in a darkened room, with his eyes bandaged and the doctor coming every day.

As to what had happened, Johnny would not say a word. The doctor looked grave and hinted obscurely at damage to the optic nerve that might mean total blindness. But plenty of other folk were ready to swear the accident had been no accident, but rather a deed of daring on Johnny's part. He had come upon two rough fellows robbing an inoffensive peddler and had put the robbers to rout, but not before one of them had fired directly across his eyes. He was powder burned on cheeks and forehead—so much was certain.

Johnny, suppliant or angry, to be twisted around her little finger, was one person; Johnny, stern and resolved, putting her away in spite of pleading, very much another. All at once Helen awoke to the knowledge that she loved him. She had rushed to him at the first word of trouble, meaning only to sympathize and console. It was his voice, pathetically brave, still more pathetically full of renunciation, which had shown her what was in her own heart. "No; I can't let you stay, Helen," he had said, letting her hand fall. "I know you too well. You are so sorry for me you might come to love me. Why, I've seen you often and over and over of a lame dog. Ever since this—a sort of gulp at the word—"happened I have been so glad you didn't care for me, because I love you so well I won't let you ruin your future. I'm a common, crossroads sort—nothing like your fine gentlemen, but at least I can play you fair."

Then Helen, by turns hot and cold, had knelt and laid her head on his shoulder, sobbing out her love and penitence. She could feel Johnny swallowing hard. But he held obstinately by what he had said. It was the same the next day, the next and the next.

At the end of a week Papa Corson took a hand. "You are trying hard to tie a millstone around your neck," he said unfeelingly. "I might not object to that so very much if only the millstone was willing. Johnny Haley has got enough to keep two people out of the poorhouse. But I've a mighty strong notion he don't want you. Unless you want to make yourself a laughingstock you'll keep out of his way."

Helen had not been spoiled all her twenty years for nothing. She listened, growing angrier and angrier all the time. But she turned away without a word and ten minutes later had bundled her mother into the phaeton and was driving like mad toward the country town. The business that took her there was soon transacted, and then the horses found their heads turned toward the Haley farm. There Helen burst in upon Johnny, locked her hand in his and said tremulously over her shoulder to a man who followed in her wake with Mrs. Corson on his arm:

"We are ready, Dr. Lansing. Please marry us quickly, no matter what Johnny says. He—he may not be quite right in his mind."

Johnny almost sprang up. Helen's hand shook so he knew she needed support. His eyes were still bandaged, but the curls on top of his head seemed to wink at the minister, who stood twiddling the license uncertainly.

"Let her go, parson!" Johnny called out joyously, drawing Helen a little closer. He made the responses in a suspiciously strong voice and at the end tossed his blinders to the other side of the room.

"Helen! Sweetheart! Wife!" he cried. "I'd have to see you right now, even if it cost me my eyes. But I'm not blind nor going to be, even though that cannon cracker did sing my eyebrows—"

"It is I who have been blind all these years," Helen interrupted. Then catching the twinkle in her mother's eyes: "I understand now. You two conspired to make me see."

The Kaffir Thought It a Joke.

I once took some Kaffirs from their desolate homes in the more desolate gorges beyond the mountain ranges to the more civilized south. Like most savages, they looked with stupid indifference at the marvels about them, and once only were they excited by an incident which opened their eyes to what they considered a most extraordinary and unnatural state of things.

They were descending a road when one of them chanced to remark that he was hungry, and the English "sahib" bought him some food at a wayside shop. The Kaffir saw the money change hands.

"How is this?" he inquired in surprise. "Do you have to pay for food in this country?"

"Certainly."

"What a country?" cried the man in amazement. Then, after pondering awhile, he continued doubtfully: "Suppose a man had no money in this country. He might starve."

"It is quite possible."

The Kaffir shook with uncontrollable laughter. It was the best joke he had ever heard. He then explained the ridiculous system to his companions, and they roared in chorus:—"Where Three Empires Meet."

A One Volume Man.

A curious example of generous obstinacy was a stout English countryman who inquired for a nice book to read, "one with a story in." On several being placed before him, he examined them attentively and picked out the middle volume of a "three decker" with the remark: "This 'ere's my sort. What's the price?"

"Oh," was the reply, "this is only the second volume. The story goes through three. The set is half a crown."

"Have a crown! Well, I'll gie ye that for that one book. It's a pretty one enough."

"But won't you have the other two as well? You'd better."

"Naw. I don't like th' beginnin' of a story. I can't get forrard w' it. An' I don't like th' endin'. I don't know as 'ow it's comed about. But in th' middle un I'm into th' thick of it right off. No, I'll only tak' th' middle un. It'll set me up for a month." And, cramming the book into his pocket he put down his half crown and disappeared with a "Good night" before the other volumes could be given to him.—Chambers' Journal.

THE NEW WOMAN

She Is in the Lead

I HAVE been reading a brief outline of one of the strangest lives ever lived by a woman. A remarkable and famous career it would have been even for a man. The woman was Mrs. Jane Burke, Indian scout, hunter, miner, army guide—likewise, unfortunately, gambler and whisky drinker, it is said. Had she left off the last two she would have been easily as distinguished in her career as Colonel Cody has become in his. She was not very old when she died in Terry, S. D.,—only about fifty-one. Yet the true story of her life would outstrip in romance, in deeds of daring, strength and skill almost any mere fiction tale of adventure that could be written. Mrs. Burke was born in Princeton, Mo., but went when the merest slip of a girl with her father to Montana to hunt gold. The life of the miners' camp of those days appealed to her powerfully, and she fell in with it at once. Famous Indian fighter and scout she became very soon. She feared nothing dead or alive. She wore a man's buckskin suit, with knife and pistols at her belt. Once in a hard fought Indian battle she saved the life of Captain Egan of the United States army in 1872. He gave her the name of "Calamity Jane," and under that designation you have often read of her. She acted as scout for General Crook in his Indian campaigns, carrying dispatches and accomplishing desperate rides, taking risks that few men would have dared. Another of her feats was the capture of Jack McCall, the murderer of "Wild Bill," otherwise William Hickok, whom she seems to have cared for with all a strong woman's devotion. When she was dying and knew it she asked that her body be buried beside that of "Wild Bill," and this was done. But civilization overtook even this great character at last—great, though unfortunately placed. At length there were no more Indians to fight or horse thieves to lynch, no more galloping over the plains with knife and pistols at belt, no more wild mining camp life. Then "Calamity Jane" died. Her life ought to be written.

Mrs. Booker T. Washington is working bravely for women of her own color. It is a field of labor a prophet and hero might be grateful for. Negro women today are making better use of their race's newly obtained advantages than negro men are. Mrs. Washington says of her colored sisters, "There is still much foundation work for us to do, but some time, somewhere, we shall stand equal to any body of women, for we accept the theory that we are inferior only in opportunity, not in ability."

Ella Wheeler Wilcox is of opinion that woman is growing in America as nowhere else, and she adds the significant prophecy, "From her will come the great leader for whom the world waits." It is not likely there will be hereafter many great single leaders either among men or women. That age is probably past, and happily so. The whole feminine sex is gradually developing the powerful, splendid qualities that only the few, even among men, have hitherto attained to. Thousands of strong, glorious, perfected women will move forward all together, and the rest of the sex will be with them, a resistless army. This is what the world is waiting for.

In a coal mine one morning no men appeared to go to work. Investigation showed that the evening before, when work ceased for the day, the company's mules were hoisted up the shaft to the surface of the earth ahead of the company's miners. "After mules is manners for me" did not snit the miner, and he struck in consequence. Men have their little feelings, too, it seems, as well as women.

One of the best signs of the times is that so many girls take a real interest in political questions.

I certainly have never seen anything like so many handsome, well groomed old ladies as I have met in the past year or two. They are plainly not young, but they are really more beautiful than many of the girls, and they dress with exquisite care and taste.

How to tell when your clothes are too tight? Breathe in all the air you can hold, lift your arms over your head and clasp your hands. If you cannot do this with perfect ease and without the feeling of being bound, then your garments are injuriously close fitting. They are tighter than skin tight, for the skin permits you to make all motions freely.

It is better to earn the money to get new dresses than to sit down and make over old ones.

It has been said often that if a horse knew his own power no human being could control or drive him. The same is exactly true of woman. What is it that makes one human being superior to another? It is the sense of one's own inward power, and that sense of power can be cultivated.

Have resources within yourself. Then you will never be lonely or dependent on others for happiness. There are gardening, cycling, reading, music—a dozen enterprising and improving exercises a woman can devote herself to.

All things are possible to the will and the illuminated mind.

ELIZA ARCHARD CONSER.

IN LEAGUE WITH CUPID

Depew Claims Credit For Recent Senatorial Weddings.

THE FORCE OF A GOOD EXAMPLE.

New York Senator Tells How Stewart of Nevada Caught the Marrying Habit and Declares That by the Time of the Presidential Election There Will Not Be a Single Unmarried Senator.

"The marriage of Senator William Morris Stewart of Nevada shows the force of a good example, when the exemplar is a person whom wise people follow," recently commented Senator Depew, the first of the senators who a short time ago married young wives, says the New York American.

"Only recently I read the statement of a wealthy widow in the west that my letter of congratulation to Senator Platt prior to the latter's marriage had so moved him as to lead to a decision on his part to follow the example of Senators Platt and Depew.

"His sons bitterly opposed a second marriage. He settled a sufficient sum of money on each, however, to prevent further opposition and married.

"I am afraid I will be responsible for more mature connubial bliss in this country than falls to the lot, ordinarily, of any one. I noticed during the closing days of last session that Senator Stewart was looking at me more frequently than would be justified by any other interest he would have except that he was catching the marrying habit.

"Yesterday's affair shows that he was both catching it and was caught. I judge by the time of the presidential election, with Platt and Stewart and myself married, there will not be a single unmarried senator in the circle.

"Senator Stewart is one of the most genial and charming of men. He has been over thirty years in the senate and has an accumulation of wisdom, anecdote and wit from long association in such a prominent way in public affairs that he is sure to be a fascinating personality in the domestic circle. Putting that together with all I hear about the lady, they are both to be congratulated.

"Yes, to follow that line of thought, I would say that the successful man in the world is the one most likely to build an ideal home for his wife. He understands. The age of love? Age is not a question of years, but of constitution and temperament. Ninon d'Enclos cut out all the beauties of the French court when she was ninety years old."

The marriages of Senators Stewart, Depew and Platt have started the rumormongers of the senate chamber infested with the matrimonial fever, and the list of still eligible senators is being scanned eagerly by the mothers of marriageable daughters.

PRIZES FOR PUMPKIN PIES.

A Difficult Question Decided at a Missouri Pumpkin Show.

If there is anything in the cooking of which the Missouri farmer's wife excels, it is pumpkin pies, says the Kansas City Journal. An incident at the Skidmore "pumpkin show" recently indicates that the oncoming generation of farmers' wives will be fully equal to their mothers in this important particular. W. J. Skidmore, Skidmore's leading citizen, offered a prize to the country maiden who should make the best pumpkin pie, he to be the judge. Six pies were exhibited. When Mr. Skidmore took a bite of the first, he mentally decided that it would take the prize. When he bit the second, he decided the prize would have to be halved. When he bit the third, he concluded the prize would have to be divided into three parts.

The upshot was that Mr. Skidmore was not able to make a selection. Instead, however, of dividing the prize into six parts, he ruled that each was so good as to deserve a prize, and so he gave six prizes instead of one. Even the New England mince pie has to go way back and sit down when the Missouri pumpkin pie marches upon the table.

Golf as a Home Wrecker.

Judging from the number of wives' complaints and confessions published every week in the Scotsman, golfers must be ranked among the most neglectful of husbands, says a London cable dispatch to the Chicago Inter-Ocean. Golf, the writers assert, has paralyzed the enterprise and energy of many breadwinners. The time formerly given by the golfer to the companionship of wife and family is spent now, it is declared, on the links. His conversation is confined to mere club room gossip. He has no interest in literature, save that of the golfing papers and magazines. The neglected wives complain bitterly that they have sunk to the level of mere housekeepers since their husbands have become golf maniacs.

Smokeless Cigars Next.

The Illinois Central railroad management is said to be about to introduce smokeless engines. So far so good, says the Cincinnati Enquirer. Perhaps the next reform ought to be smokeless smoking cars. Anyhow there is room for improvement in that connection. Frequently clean men who don't smoke or if they do buy cigars of a fair quality have to resort to the smoking car when the other coaches are crowded. They do not like smoke that is not even fit to cure side meat or to paddle through rivers of tobacco expectoration. A good many smoking cars are vile.

WOMEN WORKERS.

Odd Ways in Which Some of Them Earn Their Living.

In the old days there were practically only three ways in which a woman might earn her living by sewing, by teaching and by nursing. Anything else was considered unladylike, and indeed any other occupation was not likely to be open to women. Now all is changed, and we keep hearing of new ways by which women can earn her daily bread. For instance, in Berlin (just think of it that most un-new womanly city!) women sign painters are no novelty. There is a regular school for them. They learn how to use the brush and how to mix paints. Gymnastic training is carefully practiced before they are allowed to ascend the scaffolding, so that they may not lose their nerve in standing on the ladder. They wear the gray linen frock and cap which are the house painter's badge as well as his defense against paint.

A Minneapolis woman has constituted herself a traveling librarian, organizing and cataloging libraries wherever she finds occasion. Of course to do this work one must have a regular library training, a thorough knowledge of bookkeeping and ability to read French and German.

Entertainment catering is another branch in which several clever girls are engaged. It is a calling particularly suited to girls of good education and social standing. When the busy hostess wishes to give an entertainment she calls in one of these young women, who takes all responsibility from the shoulders of her employer.

She superintends the making out of the programme, if any; the menus and the order in which any diversions shall appear. She is an expert on table decorations and can plan novel figures for a cotillon.

A very profitable occupation is that of designer of advertisements. With a certain cereal or article of commerce in mind, the clever girl writes a line or two or a verse. She accompanies this with the suggestion for a picture and takes it to the advertising manager of the firm to which the article belongs. If the idea is a good one she is well paid for it and is probably asked to submit more of her ideas. Indeed, the successful planning of advertisements is something which pays far more than the higher forms of art.

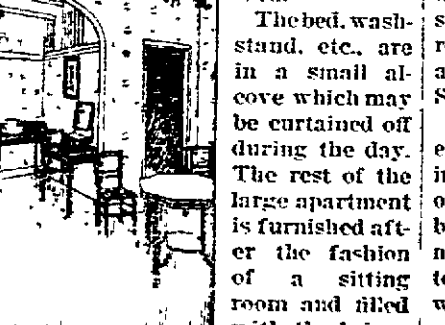

But it is the French women who have the strangest modes of earning their daily bread. Snails are raised in great quantities in the gardens around Paris and Bordeaux, as they are considered dainties on the Paris bills of fare. A woman on the outskirts of Paris, by name Mlle. Blanche, provides the zoological garden with ants' eggs. So bitten is she by her stock that her skin has assumed a leather like texture, and bites do not worry her any longer. For she lives and sleeps among her sacks of ants!

AN ALCOVE BEDROOM.

Combination Bedroom and Sitting Room Which is Popular.

In a small house or where each member of the family desires a "den" as well as a sleeping room the arrangement depicted in the illustration will be found a good idea.

FOR A SMALL HOUSE.

The bed, washstand, etc., are in a small alcove which may be curtained off during the day. The rest of the large apartment is furnished after the fashion of a sitting room and filled with the bric-a-brac, books, etc., of the owner.

The paper of the room in the picture is an empire pattern, green and white. The woodwork is white, but the furniture is mahogany inlaid with a light tracing. The washstand is fitted with green and white china. The old-fashioned dressing stand is worthy of notice on account of its quaint lines.

R. DE LA BAUME.

THEY DISAGREED

Note the Reason Why

SOPHRONISBA and Athanasia were devoted friends. Sophronisba was a buyer for a department store and got $30 a week. Athanasia was a stenographer and managing clerk in an office and received $25 a week. They ought to have been happy, but they were not—not quite, that is. Nobody ever is.

The young women had heard and read of the aesthetic homes business women often made together and lived in, as it were, in paradise. They determined to take a flat. They took it. They furnished it artistically. It had china bric-a-brac from the ten cent store, a chafing dish of a kind they had read about in a woman's page edited by a man and little gilt chairs that nobody but a young woman could sit in. There was indeed one chair large enough for a man, and in that it was intended Athanasia's sweetheart should deposit his noble form—if he came.

Sophronisba and Athanasia looked upon their possessions and were happy—over Sunday. Monday evening they reached home, each after her day's work, weary and longing for sympathy and pity, Sophronisba from Athanasia, Athanasia from Sophronisba. It was Sophronisba who opened the ball. "Oh-ah-ah-ah!" she groaned. "I wish I was dead. I do! There's that insulting old Yardsick up and told me today the last lot of neckties I got for the store were off color and I must look out what I was about. He'll be the death of me yet, that man will. He's crazy, and he sets me wild. I've had a headache all day, and I'm not strong anyhow, and I'm all tired out and stiff from working so hard fixing up the flat. There's that snippy Nellie Bay, the notion salesgirl, nobody but a cash-girl three years ago, and now she's as impudent as a lord and sets herself up over me just because old Yardsick said she was pretty. I won't stand it!"

Athanasia had a sorrow that she did not mention. The possible sweetheart had not called the evening before, and she had looked for him. It tinged all her day with sadness, and she was feeling a little down in her mind on general principles because something had gone wrong with the business. She opened up so soon as Sophronisba paused for breath.

"It's enough to kill anybody to be a business woman, and I'm nearly dead. I've got a pain at the base of my brain. I always have it when I'm overworked, and the doctor told me I ought to be so careful and never go among people who would hurt my feelings, for it would fly to the base of my brain. Doctor says I'm too sensitive anyhow to work for my living and never ought to do it. I've got such a cold I can hardly see, and every breath I draw gives me such a pain in my lungs. Oh, dear!"

And Athanasia collapsed. Sophronisba suddenly straightened up and looked ed miffed. This was not what she wanted. The two kept house a month. Every night the story told by each was the same, with slight variations. Each came home slumped and whining to the other. Each had some new grievance, a pain in another place. Each wanted the other to condole with her, tell her she was an angel and a martyr and a victim of deserved love and appreciation and diamonds. Instead of that, each spilled her own sorrows over on the other, and that was all the sympathy either got. At last Sophronisba exclaimed:

"Athanasia Stimmerson, you are enough to kill a horse with your whining and complaining and never a word of sympathy for anybody's troubles but your own. You've not got half as much to bear as I have. You're enough to make a man get a divorce from his wife."

"And I'd like to know what you are, with your eternal groaning and down in the month business! I come home at night here tired to death and disheartened, expecting to find somebody to tell my troubles to, and you don't do anything but turn around and sloop all over me with your own selfish woes. They're all imaginary anyhow. You're enough to drive a saint to strong drink."

The idyllic flat was dismantled. The two friends now do not even nod as they pass by. But neither has she found a friend who will let her pour out all her troubles without in return mentioning some of her own.

DAME FASHION'S MOODS.

The Modes of the Season Are Based on Common Sense.

So far this season fashion has appeared to take a common sense view of things in general and to choose out of what we have been wearing all that is useful, pretty and becoming and after making a few changes and alterations giving them back to us for fall and winter wear. The shirt waists that so many were sure would be relegated to the burn whence old styles never return are with us still. They are now of the flannels, other Scotch or French, and of silks of quite heavy qualities, some of them overlaid with lace. Veilings are also used largely for these waists, and they take so kindly to heavy applications of lace that it seems to belong on them by right. Liberty in white or very light color is often employed for the dressiest of these, and many of them show a small cape-line entirely of lace or nearly if not quite covered with the material. Quite a number of these small capes and pelerines are bordered with fringe, and some have an elaborate pattern worked in shades.

The voile gowns will soon be thought too transparent for the season, but the waists of that pleasing fabric will be seen often. Crepe de chine, leopard velvets in very rich colors, embossed patterns, the Persian designs in the same and the shining gun metal velvets all are designed for separate waists.

The general plan of making them is not very different from that of the last season, but one may say that they are not so loose and look much trimmer at the waist line. The point in front is a matter of personal taste, for some of them are quite round. Others are deeply pointed, and almost all, of whatever kind or quality, have tucks as a part of the body of the waist or trimming.

For everyday wear the vestings give a fine variety of stuffs and colors, all mercerized. The vestings, being so thick, require less trimming, but they make stylish and striking waists. Madras is another cotton which is developed into almost a new fabric, so heavy and so carefully designed is it. Most of the flannels are intended to be washed, and so the coloring is not so rich and vivid as silk, but it is handsome, particularly a velvety mulberry shade. This in soft woolen goods is simply beautiful.

I notice on many of the waists much shirring. This is put on the shoulders and at the wrists and waist. Shirring was always pretty. Black brilliantine is used in many pretty and useful garments of this kind. But in the veiling there are many colors and shades, including lilac, champagne, pale blue, rose and shell pink, mode, ecru, castor and several shades of delicate green and the helios. Some have deep lace covered yokes, and in fact one can have what she thinks she would look pretty in.

Buttons are to be a factor in the season's styles, and some of them are almost as fine as jewels, while others are severely plain. Some are large and others very small; some are of pearl and others of silk to match the dress. Buttons covered with linen are seen on many waists, and the amount of fancy passementerie with small crocheted pendants is limitless. Belts are made of fancy silk braid and have tasseled ends, while some are military in form and execution. The Cossack and Hungarian brands are offered with confidence, for they are too handsome to overlook.

Some of the fancy collars and belts look as if they had been taken from some museum where a special cult had been made of Indian relics. The same way of weaving must have been employed, and the same figures have been wrought. There is a glistening bead belt all in white, with a twisted fringe of the same, which is really beautiful from every point of view. All these bead belts are long enough to cross at the waist line and hang down several inches, say six, with the fringe still below.

Among the silks we find the new soft finished black taffeta, which is to be a leading fabric for nice suits. There are also many colored taffeta dress silks and velvets chiffon, which is a marvel of beauty.

Next to silk for fineness and desirability comes the imported broadcloth. This may be seen finished or dull finished, as one prefers. When made as such a superb material deserves it is one of the most elegant of woolen goods.

MARK TWAIN AND LUCY

American and British Humorists Recall Stories of Each Other.

NOVEL IDEA IN STARTING A PAPER

Before Sailing For Italy Mark Tells of a Proposed Postmortem Black-mailing Sheet—His Comments on Aristophanes, Rabelais and Dowle. Does Not Want to Be in Same Place With Elijah III. in Next World.

Henry W. Lucy, the British humorist, better known as Toby, M. P., arrived in the United States the other morning at New York for a five weeks' visit. Shortly after he arrived Mark Twain, with his family, sailed for Italy, says the New York Times. The chief motive for the trip was the urgent need of an ocean voyage for Mrs. Clemens, who is an invalid. Mr. Lucy as he came off the steamship had a note in his hand which, he said, was from Mark Twain. It read, "You arrive this morning, and I sail this afternoon in order to avoid you."

In explaining the note he said: "Some time ago Mark Twain and I were at a surprise dinner to E. A. Abbey, the artist, when he proposed to me that we start a paper called the Obituary. We were to print the life of every living man of prominence, send him the proof and ask him for $250 for suppressing the story. I considered the matter and wrote to Twain that it was agreeable to me. Since then he has made every effort, and successfully, to keep out of my way."

Before Mark Twain sailed he was told what Lucy had said, and he replied: "That's true; we did talk it over, and I think there never was a better paying institution that could be devised. You see, the idea was to write the most scandalous things about a man while he was alive and tell him it would be published at the time of his death unless he paid to have it kept out of the papers. If the man paid handsomely we would allow him to alter the proof and cover up the spots on his career. There are very few men who have not some spots that can be artistically covered. He could cut the proof, add to it or polish it as much as he wished, but he had to pay for that. He could have as many of the copies of the paper in which the article was printed as he wished, and in the end he could be paying enough money get as good a reputation as he wanted and one of which his family could be proud."

"We had no circulation to our paper, for, you see, the circulation end is the losing end. When I got home I found I could make more money by Twain than by two, so I gently but firmly had to eliminate Lucy from the money proposition. I calculated that he would not land until tomorrow or else I should not have sent the note until today. But he is a good fellow, and I hope he will do well. However, his situation reminds me of what St. Clair McKelway said to me when he learned that the Harpers had promised me a pension for life in consideration of work I had promised to do for them. 'Colonel Harvey is living on hope,' he said, 'while you are living on a certainty.'"

At the pier Mark Twain was occupied in getting eighteen pieces of baggage and his wife, two daughters and another lady who, like Mrs. Clemens, is an invalid on board the ship. Some one suggested that Mr. Clemens was having a great deal of trouble.

"Well," he replied, "I always was sorry for Father Noah, he had so much trouble getting all of his animals aboard the ark. But, you see, I'm peevish today. I have absorbed all of my wife's pugnacity and all of my daughters' audacity."

At the pier a tax assessor from Tarrytown was waiting for the humorist. When Mr. Clemens appeared the assessor stepped up to him and said, an anxious look in his eyes, "When are you coming back?" Mr. Twain did not answer, but, turning to the reporters, said:

"I don't own the Casey house at Tarrytown. I have only rented it for a year. As a matter of fact I am tired of renting four houses and being able to occupy but one. I don't see that it matters to that fellow at what time I am going to return."

It was remarked that mention had been made of the fact that Mr. Clemens had been compared with Rabelais and Aristophanes.

"Rabelais, yes," he commented; "Aristophanes, no. I never knew Aristophanes personally. All of what I knew of him was told me by William Dean Howells. I get quite a confused idea of what he was like. Sometimes I think of him sailing up the English channel with Sir John Hawkins; again I think of Aristophanes as the Greek physician and again as an Italian virtuoso. If I had lived in the fifteenth century I should have been Rabelais. I know him from top to bottom."

"When you wrote 'Huckleberry Finn' and told of the king, who after stripping was painted as the tiger for the circus, did you have Dowle in mind?" somebody asked.

A deep frown came over the author's face, and he replied:

"I can't trace the slightest resemblance, for I have never seen Dowle disrobe. I have a presentiment that I am to meet Dowle in the next world, but I do not know where. If I find him in one place I will go to the other. I don't care how hot or how cold it is, but I do not want to be in the place where he is. I want society in the next world, but not that of Dowle."

Just before the vessel sailed a note from Mr. Lucy brought his love and his wishes for a good voyage.

AUTUMN OUTING DRESS.
The Fancy For Spotted Borders to Plain Materials.

The jaunty costume illustrated, while designed as appropriate for yachting, will be equally useful for seaside wear, mountain and country use in its general features, as little is demanded for these purposes beyond a short cut skirt and any neat blouse or coat arrangement.

One of the taking developments of the present season, where decoration is concerned, is the fancy for spotted borders to plain materials. On all sides we have seen, and are destined to see, this form of ornamentation, and very charming is it in its simplicity, especially so after the almost bewildering mass of tucks and insertion, braids and buttons, which has been prone to crowd into the first place.

The design is well adapted for serge—for instance, blue with a blue or red and white spotted border.

The skirt is one of the new box plaited designs. The box plaits are arranged at intervals all round, one straight down the front and one either side of the back, where they touch, the placket hole being placed between them and securely fastened with hooks and eyes. There is no reason, however, why this necessary but sometimes treacherous adjunct should not be more conveniently arranged beneath the first box plait on the left side.

The seams in every case are directly underneath a plait and are thus perfectly invisible in the finished skirt, while they most skillfully fit the figure from the hips to the waist without the aid of darts. The plaits, after they are pressed down, are finally stitched at the edges.

The border, which is simply a strip cut on the cross four inches wide, is laid on, run or stitched at the bottom, turned up and lightly run down by hand at the top, the edge here being afterward finished by a coarse feather-stitch in either purple silk or flax thread, as desired.

The pretty bodice is also laid in box plaits, one down the center and one

LIFTED BY SCOTS IS DUCHESS OF HAMILTON.

DUCHESS OF HAMILTON.

London, Oct. 31.—The duchess of Hamilton, premier duchess of Scotland, has, during her short residence at her husband's Scotch residence, Hamilton palace, this summer, taken such great interest in Scottish industries that she may now be ranked as second only to the duchess of Sutherland, to whom Scotland owes so much.

Lady Hamilton was Miss Nina Moore, daughter of England's most popular soldiers, and sister of Maj. Peor, who made an enviable record in South Africa. The duke was for many years an invalid, but modern medical science came to his rescue and soon after his recovery he married. He now has an infant heir, the marquis of Douglas.

COTTAGE FURNISHINGS

Hints About Ceilings, Walls and Some Bits of Furniture.

For homelike furnishings the sitting room in a cottage has a particular adaptability. Economy, the foundation element that makes the house a cottage and not a mansion, is often the factor that achieves this quality.

The size of the room and the height of the ceiling also insure a degree of coziness that is not attainable as a general thing in more pretentious houses. As cottage walls are usually from eight to nine feet in height, the paper should run without interruption from the floor to the ceiling. A frieze or border is, of course, unnecessary. At the joining of the side wall and ceiling a finish may be given by a plain molding of wood like the wood-work.

The general rule for treating the ceiling of a cottage is with a water color tint (calcimine) of cream white. If the ceiling is defaced and a paper must be adopted let it be a plain cream white, laid on without lapping the seams. Sometimes a figured paper looks well on the ceiling, but great care should be taken in its selection.

In a room that is put to such general use as a sitting room the paper for the side wall should be chosen for its really livable quality. In a sunny exposure it should be soft and quiet and in darker places warm and cheerful. Stripes that show a decided contrast become tiresome to the eye, but a stripe that is subordinate to a good design—that is, a stripe printed under the design—adds dignity to the walls.

Comfortable chairs are an important part of the sitting room furnishings, and as these are never to be bought

How Senator Hanna Had His Smoke.

All Portage county, O., is admiring Senator M. A. Hanna for what he recently said to a street car conductor while in that county, says a dispatch from Kent. It was on the trip from Ravenna to Kent. The car was a special one, ordered by the committee, and there were no women aboard. Everybody started to smoke. The conductor, apparently seeking notoriety, picked out the senator and, tapping him on the shoulder, said, "You can't smoke in here."

"Isn't this a special car?" queried the senator.

"Yes, sir," answered the conductor.

"And it's paid for, isn't it?" continued Mr. Hanna.

"I suppose so," was the reply.

"Then," said the senator, "I guess we'll smoke."

The conductor hastily retired.

He received $100 a ship, but it is understood that a special arrangement has been made with him by the navy department under the terms of which he will receive in the future only $75 a ship.

NEW PRIME MINISTER OF SERBIA TO HELP KEEP PETER ON UNEASY THRONE

Belgrade, Oct. 30.—The new prime minister of Serbia is General Sara Gruits. He is considered one of the most popular men in Serbia and probably more able than anyone else to keep King Peter on his uneasy throne. Gruits was not in any way connected with the regicides and was entirely ignorant of the plot to make away with Alexander and Draga. He has given Col. Matich, the principal assassin, an important military command, but this was insisted upon by King Peter who felt that he had to do something for the murderers of his predecessor. Serbian business men and all others who are not in the army of politics are hoping that Gruits will be able to bring an era of peace and prosperity. Serbia has great natural resources and a thrifty and industrious people. A few years of quiet would make her one of the Balkan states.

The face has the appearance of having been molded, but others say it is as natural as life. The orange has been placed in a jar of alcohol for preservation, and will, undoubtedly, form a part of the show at St. Louis exhibition.

A MILLIONAIRE'S FLIGHT.
How Jim Dunfee Suffered When He Raised the Socks Issue.

Jim Dunfee of Syracuse, N. Y., raised the socks issue. He has no one else to blame for what happened to him at the Yates House the other day, says the New York World. Nevertheless he is angry.

Jim, once a bootblack, is now a millionaire and member of the Democratic state committee. When his friend Fred Thompson was seeking the Democratic nomination for mayor the cry was raised that he was a "silk stocking" and wouldn't do.

"He's no silk stocking," was Dunfee's reply. "Twenty cents a pair is all any gentleman should pay for socks. Fred's cost no more." After that the politicians took to examining one another's socks to see if they came under Dunfee's rules.

Dunfee met Alan C. Fols, Republican candidate for mayor; Ralph S. Bowen and some more Republicans in the Yates House lobby.

"Hello, Jim," said Bowen. "I don't believe you practice what you preach. I'm going to look at the ones you've got on."

He seized Dunfee's trousers leg and tried to pull it up. Dunfee squirmed to get away. The side seam of the trousers ripped to the knee. There was plain black above the shoe tops. The socks could have been bought at 50 cents for three pairs.

But between them and the knee was a pale blue fabric.

"Sim," said Fols sternly, "you are a hypocrite. Twenty cents for socks, but $20 a suit for the other things."

In the rush the other men made to inspect the "other things" the oracle of Democratic simplicity in clothes ran a great risk of having to wear a barrel house.

"You'll wish you had a bathing suit handy next time I meet you, Bowen," said Dunfee. "I won't leave a rag on your back."

SMOKE INSPECTOR'S WOES.
A Fair St. Louisian Now Adds Poetry to His Troubles.

Many and various are the complaints which come to the office of "Smoke 1" Jones in regard to the abatement of the smoke nuisance, says the St. Louis Republic.

One of the letters charges the inspector with being an obstructionist and tells him that if he could have his way everybody would be burning wood and St. Louis would be a signal station only for river traffic. Another writer vents his wrath by stating that his plant is situated so near the city limits that the only persons the smoke could possibly annoy are those buried in some nearby cemeteries.

What Inspector Jones considers a gem was received the other day. It is "poetry," written on tinted paper in a delicately feminine hand. In the upper right hand corner on the back of the sheet is the address of a West Pine boulevard residence, near King's highway. The verses are as follows:

Oh, Mr. Jones, we pray of you
Please stop that smoke, oh, do, oh, do!
Our walls and curtains all are black
From that horrid Monticello stack.
We've called you up on the telephone,
And always in your sweetest tone
You said, "We'll fix it up at once!"

The summer time has come and gone,
Yet volumes greet us night and morn.
Please give us the relief we ask;
It really isn't such a task
To please the folks across the way
From the Monticello hotel-a-way.

MRS. JANE DOWLE.

Now she is "queen of Zion," having been crowned a couple of years ago in the Chicago Auditorium. On that occasion she wore a coronation robe that cost $1,000. At the same time she was made "overseer of women's work in Zion."

Mrs. Dowle takes part in the pulpit exercises and occasionally lays hands on the sick. She is a modest looking, rather retiring lady, with a low voice, and has an air of refinement and culture in striking contrast with the coarse antics of her husband in the pulpit.

BEGAN AS A PRIVATE.
General Humphrey, Head of the Quartermaster's Department.

Brigadier General Charles F. Humphrey, quartermaster general of the army, who is one of the most efficient officers in the service, rose from the ranks. He entered the army as a private in 1863 and was given a commission in the regular army three years later.

He was chief quartermaster of the Shafter expedition to Cuba, and much surprise was felt in army circles when President Roosevelt appointed him quartermaster general because of an incident of that campaign.

Colonel Roosevelt, then in command of the rough riders, wanted some supplies for his men. Colonel Humphrey refused to give them, and after a curt exchange of opinions with the man destined to be his commander in chief, Colonel Humphrey, it is said, invited him to go to a certain place much warmer than Cuba.

CHESTERFIELD AND TOP COATS FOR FASHION'S SLAVES

New York, Oct. 31.—These bracing mornings call for topcoats. Those in the tan and light brown shades of covert cloth and whipcord are from 31 to 34 inches long. For dressier wear the chesterfield in unfinished black worsted, silk faced to edge, is attractive. The skirts fall to a point just below the knee. This is the popular length this fall.

THREE PRETTY SWEATERS.

The sweaters of this season are far more becoming to the average woman than were those of last fall. They are made to blouse over so slightly, the sleeves are fuller and the whole effect is one of tidiness.

Here are three pretty new designs. No. 1 is white with red polka dots. No. 2 is in two shades of dark red. No. 3 is white with a black thread.

BEAUTIFUL ENGLISH GIRL TO MARRY HORSE GUARD

London, Oct. 31.—Miss Beatrice Paget, one of the 12-year-old beautiful English young women who are married to Lord Herbert, son and heir of the earl of Pembroke, and an officer in the Royal Horse Guards, Miss Paget is a daughter of Lady Alice Herbert.

IN TOMATO TIME.

Preserves, Pickles, Catchup and Other Tempting Concoctions.

Preserved Yellow Tomatoes.—For each pound of firm, even sized tomatoes allow one-half of a pound of sugar and one-half of a pint of water. Boil sugar and water for a moment, then put in a few tomatoes at a time and simmer very gently until tender. When all are done add to the syrup the juice and yellow rind of one lemon and boil for fifteen minutes or until quite heavy. Return to the fire with the fruit, bring again to the boiling point and can at once.

Sweet Spiced Tomatoes.—Into a large agate kettle put seven pounds of peeled and sliced tomatoes, three pounds and a half of granulated sugar, one pint of vinegar, one tablespoonful each of whole cloves, allspice and peppercorns, one-half of an ounce of stick cinnamon, one-half of an ounce of green ginger and one scant teaspoonful of salt. Cook slowly for two hours, stirring occasionally to prevent sticking at the bottom. Can and seal.

Sliced Green Tomato Pickle.—Cut firm, medium sized green tomatoes in half inch slices. Have ready a cold brine sufficiently strong to bear an egg. Pour over the tomatoes and set aside for twenty-four hours. Dissolve a bit of alum the size of a hickory nut in three quarts of boiling water, cook in it a portion of the tomatoes at a time until tender. Mix well together one teaspoonful of ground cloves, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, one dessert-spoonful of dry mustard, one-half of a teaspoonful of black pepper and one tablespoonful of sugar. Skim the tomatoes from the boiling liquid and put in layers in a stone pot or jar, sprinkling evenly with the mixed spices. When the jar is filled cover with cold vinegar and put away in a cool place.

Tomato Catchup.—Wash and wipe a bushel of ripe tomatoes, slice and cook until tender, then press through a sieve. Return to the fire and cook until thick. Add two quarts of good cider vinegar and boil for half an hour, then add half a pound of sugar, two-thirds of a cupful of salt, an ounce of ground black pepper, an ounce of allspice, two ounces of ginger, half an ounce of cloves, half an ounce of mace, an ounce of cinnamon, two grated nutmegs and a small red pepper pod. Boil for ten minutes and bottle.—Table Talk.

With Fresh Peaches.

Peach dumplings are possible at any season (with canned fruit), but just now they are delicious with the fresh fruit. Housekeepers differ as to the paste, some preferring a rich pie crust, while others think a biscuit dough made with a double allowance of shortenings is best. In either case the paste should be rolled out one-third of an inch thick and be cut into six inch squares or circles. On each piece place a peeled peach and draw up the paste smoothly round it, pinching the edges securely together. Place some distance apart on a fat pan and bake for forty minutes in a quick oven. They may, if preferred, be steamed for half an hour, then placed in the oven until dried and lightly colored. The hard sauce which is served with them is made by creaming two tablespoonfuls of butter and gradually beating into it one cupful of powdered sugar and one teaspoonful of vanilla. This is piled on a fancy dish and set on ice until chilled.—Table Talk.

PEACH DUMPLINGS.

Cucumber Sweet Pickles.

To make cucumber sweet pickles place the cucumbers in a dish with half a cup of salt to two quarts of cucumbers. Cover with boiling water and let stand overnight. In the morning remove them from the brine, place in a granite kettle, cover with vinegar to which have been added half a cup of whole mustard seed, whole cloves and cinnamon mixed and one cup of sugar. Let come to the boiling point, but not boil. Put in cans or bottles and seal while hot.—Exchange.

The New Grape Glasses.

Grape glasses, tall, slightly cone-shaped affairs, set in silver standards, are among the most recently introduced table pieces. These are for the rinsing and refreshing of grapes at the table, and each glass provides for the immersion of one bunch, says an exchange.

Items of Health and Beauty.

It is said that men lose their hair early on account of excessive washing of the scalp.

Brittle nails can be cured by rubbing warm almond oil into the finger tips every night.

The face should be washed as seldom as possible during the day, but it must always be washed at night.

The foot is a sensitive member, and multitudes every year doubtless go to death because, in the first place, cold, damp or wet feet have been neglected.

Gymnastics and athletics develop mind as well as body. They bring the motor nerves into play and thus accelerate the brain's activity.

Some philosophical writer says there is no such thing as a red checked criminal.

HOME

BY CYNTHIA GREY.

ECONOMY IN GIVING.

We are taught that economy lies in saving odds and ends of clothing, old hats, all cast-off half-worn garments.

How many attics are filled with half-worn clothing, carefully folded or packed, or worse yet hanging unprotected for dust catchers and spider nests. If the garments are woolen, then they fall prey to the moths, and when they have fallen to pieces we sell them to the ragman or put them in the furnace.

When we packed them away or hung them out of sight, we thought they were too good to throw away, and that at some future time we should make use of them or give them to someone, but they were neglected or forgotten, and no one received any benefit from them. While they hung and fell to pieces someone was shivering with cold; while the spiders played hide and seek within their folds someone was ragged and unkempt.

There are hundreds of people who want your old clothes. It isn't hard to find out where they are needed. Your pastor can tell you; perhaps your next door neighbor knows of some family where sickness has made inroads in the income laid away for clothing. A woman who is handy with the needle could dress a family from the cast-off garments which are even now hanging in your attic.

It is poorest economy to allow a garment to lie idle when the chances are that you will never use it. Give away your cast-off garments, your old shoes, your hats and overcoats.

Street Gown for a Girl.

Here is a modish gown for a miss of 16. It is of bluetie cloth, trimmed in bands of heavy coru lace insertion, bordered with narrow black silk braid. The bodice fastens in the back, as does the pleated skirt. The shoulder cape is adjustable. The crush girdle is of black satin, finished with a black silk cord ornament.

MENUS AND RECIPES.

Day's Menu.

Breakfast.

Oatmeal and Cream.

Pan-boiled Chops. Sauted Potatoes. Toast. Coffee.

Luncheon.

Creamed Codfish.

Sliced Tomatoes. Brown Bread. Cookies. Cocoa.

Dinner.

Corn Soup.

Veal Cutlets. Hashed Potatoes. Hot Slaw. Apple Pie.

Cheese.

To pan-boil chops means to cook them in a smoking hot pan without any fat. This is a much better way of cooking them than trying to broil them directly over the fire, since it is so hard to keep them from burning by the latter method.

For the soup, take six ears of late sweet corn, cut corn from the cob and chop fine, or use one can of corn. If in haste, take the canned corn, since it is already cooked. Boil the corn with 1 quart milk and 1 small sliced onion for 20 minutes. Rub through a strainer. Thicken with 2 tablespoonfuls flour cooked together. It is seasoned with 1 teaspoon salt and a few grains of pepper mixed with the flour. Let it boil up once and serve.

The rule for hot slaw may be the southern rule as follows: Chop 1-2 head savory cabbage fine. Just cover it with boiling salted water and let it simmer until tender and the water has almost boiled away. Drain, add 1 cup vinegar, 1 tablespoon butter and salt to taste. When ready to serve, stir in 1-2 pint cream.

TO WASH RIBBONS.

Not everyone can afford a new neck ribbon every time she wishes a fresh one, and even the little white turnover collar won't keep a ribbon always as good as new.

Most ribbons are injured by washing, but wonders can be done with white soap and soft clear water. Take a cake of pure white soap and some warm soft water, make a suds and wash the ribbons and laces carefully, rinse carefully in clear, cold water and hang up or lay out on a clean cloth, until partially dried. When almost dry, draw a piece of fine muslin over a smooth glass bottle and draw the ribbon tightly over the muslin.

When washing very fine laces it is a good plan to put the lace around the bottle before it is put into the water, washing it on the bottle by shaking it gently in the suds.

Ribbons and laces that will not bear water can be cleaned by placing them in a fruit can half full of gasoline, leaving them over night. Shake the can gently occasionally during the following morning. The dirt will be taken from the ribbons and will settle in the can. When the ribbons are removed they should be hung out of doors and carefully aired, as the odor of gasoline is very disagreeable.

A BOLD, NERVY BURGLAR WAS PROWLING TOMCAT

Akron, O., Oct. 31.—"Come to my house quickly. There is a burglar on the roof!" This request was made by Mrs. J. Pinnick at police headquarters late last night. Mrs. Pinnick lives at 18 South Forge street. "The burglar has been on the roof all night," said she. Two policemen were sent to her home. They were armed. One policeman entered the house and raised an upstairs window. Just then a big tomcat jumped from the roof. The policeman pocketed their revolvers and the Pinicks went to bed.

BUILDING THE FIRE

RIGHT in the middle of the first long yawn, Just when "the rising sun betrays the dawn," While yet the gray of peace o'erspreads the sky, Drag out of comfort with a long drawn sigh! Get to the garments and adorn yourself. Reach for a match upon the closet shelf, Wink, blink and grumble for your liver's good— Go down and hustle up some coal and wood.

When it's cuss, cuss, cuss, In the middle of the muss, For your hands are black and grimy And your clothes coal dust and lily, And the fuel will not conflagrate as decent fuel should, When a sticky, sticky damp is on the wood.

Cut down the kindling to a needle size, Lay it upon the paper crisscrosswise; Then with a gentle care the scuttle take, Lift it and give the coal a gentle shake. Ten times to one the coal will run too fast, But you have got the thing arranged at last; Light at the bottom, then exclaim: "Oh, chimney won't draw, and there's a dank, dark smudge."

Then it's fume, fume, fume, And it's stamp about the room With profane ejaculation, To describe your aggravation, And you swear you long to join the ranks of that celestial choir Where nobody ever bothers with a fire.

Take out the smoldering and charred debris; Send burning paper up the flue to free Something of something else that seems to choke; Out all the draft; your lucky gods invoke Ere once again the contract you essay; How! when it finishes the same old way! Throw down the microbes of domestic strife; Swear you are done with them and call your wife!

Then it's joy, joy, joy, For the wife is the boy At the stove, and in a minute There's a good hot fire in it. And you swear you could have done it, with your hands and clothing smeared, If she hadn't come along and interfered! —Baltimore News.

A Few Years Hence.

The immense crowd went wild with enthusiasm. Jubilant horsemen overran the paddock, slapped one another on the back and shouted vociferously, while lovely women fondled the wonderful mare whose performance had broken all records.

What had she done? She had trotted a mile in one minute flat. How had she done it? She had been shot out of a gun and had slid three-fourths of the distance on a greased track.—Chicago Tribune.

We are asked for a recipe to make pie crust with buttermilk, says Rural New Yorker. Materials required are half a pint of buttermilk, half a teaspoonful of lard, half a teaspoonful of salt, a third of a teaspoonful of soda and flour enough to make a soft dough. Rub the lard into the flour, add the other ingredients, roll quickly and bake in a steady, even heat.

PHYSICAL CULTURE.

A Few Simple Exercises For Developing Grace of Body.

The present ideal of beauty is the tall, graceful athletic girl. We cannot all be tall, at least not in this incarnation, but every girl and woman may become strong and graceful. It is even claimed by physiologists that a habitually maintained erect carriage and a steady "stretching up" of the body will in course of time add something to the height. Well, it may be so, but this much, at any rate, is certain—such a position, accompanied by habitual deep breathing, will surely prevent the unsightly slumping down of the body and the thickening about the waist that too often accompany the approach of middle age.

First determine that you will stand well. To know when you do this, test your position. Put your heels together and stand with your back against a wall, perfectly straight. One celebrated physical trainer says the whole back of the body, full length, from heels to head, should touch the wall when we stand correctly; that the properly carried human spine should be perfectly straight, without any of the hollowing which the fashionable corset attempts to accentuate. He declares that only by holding the spine perpendicular can the spinal cord be free from uneven pressure and thus send full stimulus to the great nerve trunks. At any rate, the more nearly you can make the back: of your legs through their whole length, also your backbone through its whole length, touch that wall the better you stand.

Now for the front of the body. Stand upon one side of a room and approach with a long, free step to the opposite wall. Of course your toes will touch the opposite wall first as you come to it. But now notice concerning the rest of the body. Does your chest or your stomach touch first? If your stomach, then that is all wrong. In the properly developed person the chest stands out forward beyond the stomach and when you walk up to a wall will touch first every time.

The full, round, deep chest is one of the leading marks of beauty in a woman. If you find you have it not, then develop it by holding your chest up and by training yourself to habitual deep breathing. The shoulders themselves have not much to do with elevating the chest. Just draw your lungs upward, and the flabby, spongy muscles around and above the waist will follow.

The deep breathing habit itself will draw your chest upward. Stand erect, back and legs against the wall, clothing absolutely unhampering. From the region of the waist line, also a little below, begin and slowly draw in all the pure air you can hold. It is no good if the air is not pure. Then exhale as slowly as you inhaled. That is all. Habituate yourself to this, and it will develop your chest magnificently. If along with it you constantly stand erect and hold yourself up. The very breathing itself lifts the chest, as you will notice. It is a good plan to take physical exercises standing in front of a mirror, so you can note the effect.

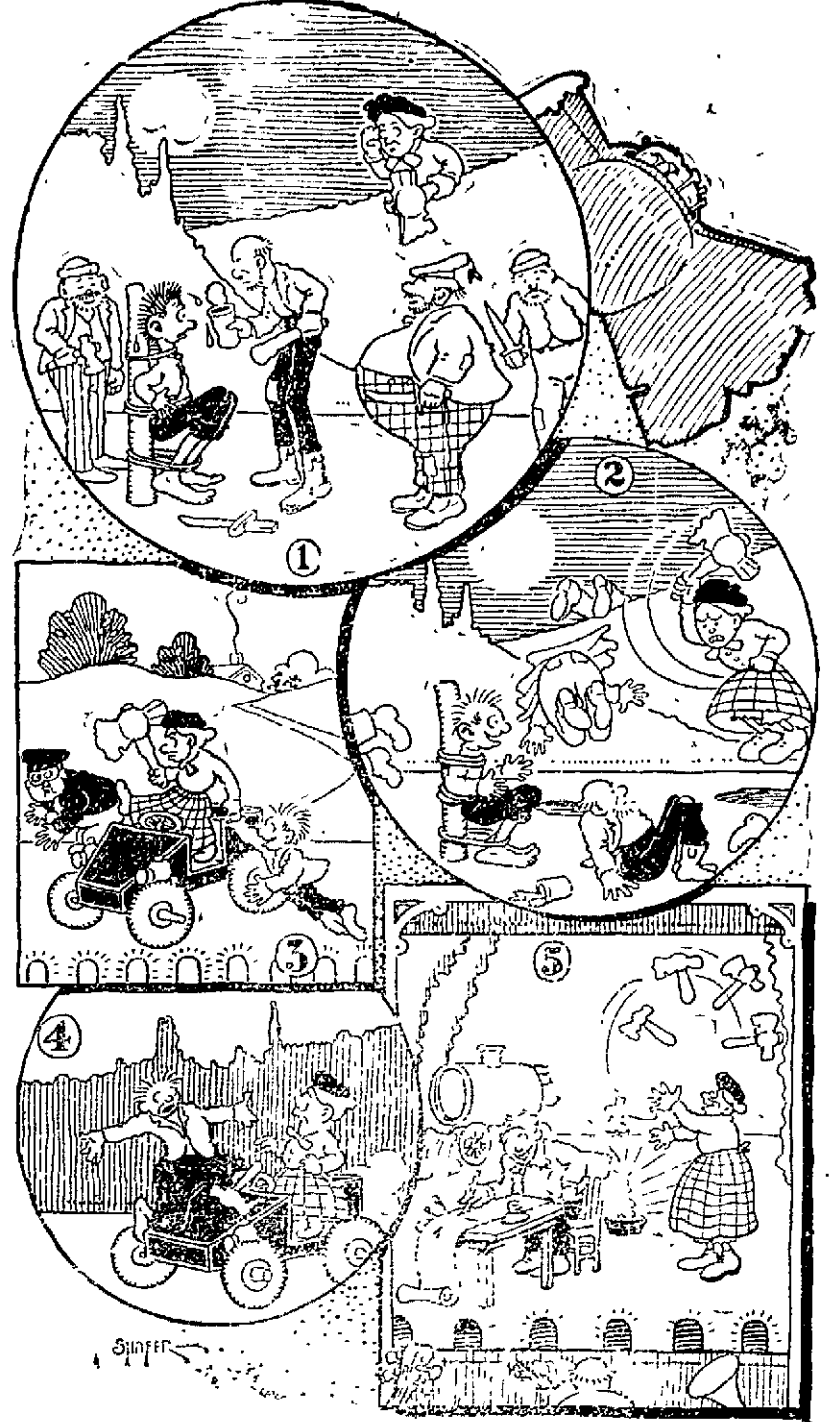

The erect carriage and constantly elevated chest give a carriage so noble that the woman who habituates herself to this attitude will be noticed and admired in a crowd wherever she passes. Strangers will involuntarily conclude she is "somebody." Pity indeed that the correct carriage is so rare among our sex that a woman who possesses it is instantly singled out wherever she goes.

There are some plain exercises that greatly strengthen and limber the muscles of the back, hips and legs and prevent the body from becoming unwieldy and hippopotamus-like. Here is one: Wearing very little clothing, and that entirely loose and unhampering, lie upon the floor flat upon the back, arms at the sides; then, without using hands or arms any more than if you had none, rise from the floor, first to a sitting posture, then upon your feet, straight up. Maybe you cannot do it at first, but practice will soon give power. Think what you would have to do if you were armless and act accordingly in this exercise. Another excellent practice is while lying upon the back on the floor to raise the legs in the air, first one, then the other, at right angles, gradually bringing your feet over toward your head. By and by you will actually be able to touch the floor above your head with your toes while you lie upon the back.

The exercises indicated in the illustration are for strengthening and making nimble the legs and back. They explain themselves, and there is nothing better for the purpose for which they are intended.

HOME BUILDING.

The Cost of the Average House Per Square Foot.

Taking the country as a whole, are the conditions favorable just now for home building? This question was asked of a number of architects and builders in different sections.

It is as good a time to build as it is likely to be in the opinion of the men interviewed. The price of material is rather high, but wood, which of course in house building is generally the principal material, is "up" to stay, and plumbing and masonry are probably on a fair basis.

The early fall is a good time to begin house building in the northern latitudes. The foundations may then be put in under favorable conditions, the work well advanced before frost and the structure closed in before snow flies, while the interior may be finished to advantage during the winter, when the artificial heating gives a dry air and an even temperature. This enables the flooring and other finish to be fitted nicely and the varnish and paint to dry in.

A house begun in September could very well be finished by February or March, five or six months being sufficient time for the average work to be carried out to advantage. This is, on the whole, rather less expensive than to build in the spring, as there is less delay on inside work.

Experience shows that the average two and a half story house with the usual fittings can be built for $3 or $4 per square foot of ground covered, according to the quality of finish desired. The advance in the cost of building has been from 20 to 30 per cent in the past ten years.

Many architects urge their clients, where they can afford it, to build of brick rather than wood. The cost of brick is relatively less today than it used to be. Wood shrinks and swells and grows shabby with time. Brick takes on a better tone and texture with time, does not shrink and swell and won't burn. Vines will grow on the brick wall. Repairs are less, insurance rates are less. The brick house is cooler in summer and much more economically heated in winter, and built with a hollow wall, it is entirely free from dampness. The cost of a brick over a wooden house is 10 to 15 per cent as a general thing, but the difference is made up in smaller bills for coal and paint.

The tendency now is toward fewer and larger rooms; to have at least one large living room in the house, in the smaller house to make the hall a reception hall, doing away with the reception room or parlor. The kitchen is being more carefully planned, as people realize the importance in the daily comfort and economy of the convenient and well planned kitchen. There was a time when the superficial features were given undue consideration and when a house was planned with reference to the rare occasions of party and reception. Today a wiser idea prevails, and the daily life of the household becomes the controlling influence.—Good Housekeeping.

Elder Apple Sauce.

Elder apple sauce is an old time dainty which deserves better than to be forgotten. It differs from apple butter, as the quartered apples are not boiled to pulp, but preserved in the clear sirup of the condensed elder. Boil sweet elder down to one-fourth or one-fifth its quantity and add solid subacid apples, pared, cored and quartered, with one-fourth their weight in sugar. Boil them very slowly till they look lucid without losing their shape, take out carefully with a wooden skimmer without breaking and boil the sirup till it is thick, then pour it over the apples. No spice goes into this to impair the high flavored apples of which it should be made. It should be a light amber preserve, thick as honey.

A Widower's Tenant

By C. B. LEWIS

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

After being in business in the city nearly a score of years, the last five of which he had been a widower and in failing health, John Dayton finally heeded the advice of the doctor and bought a farm and prepared to retire to the country and rejuvenate himself. The farm was purchased through an agency and without his having ever stepped foot upon the land. But there was one thing the agent failed to represent. The previous owner of the farm had died and left a widow and a mortgage. While the mortgage had been foreclosed and the farm sold according to law, a village lawyer had discovered a flaw in the proceedings and advised the widow to stick. Having paid for legal advice she was determined to get the benefit of it. She remained on the farm as much of a fixture as the big red barn, and she proposed to fight it out on that line.

It therefore came about that when the widower came to take possession of his farm he met with a surprise party. He understood that he would find the Widow Parsons in the house, but he didn't understand what sort of a widow she was. He found a middle aged, pleasant faced woman ready to welcome him, and her soft ways and the goodness of the dinner prejudiced him in favor of country life at once.

Nothing of the business in hand was broached until dinner was over and until he had sized the widow up as a meek and humble woman. It was when he carelessly inquired whether she had taken another farm or proposed to move to the nearest village that the first brickbat hit him. She didn't propose to vacate at all. She preferred to go on living amid the peaceful songs of birds and the lazy drone of bumblebees, but if it was to be lurid war he would find her waving her banners at the front. John

Dayton was an aggressive man, an obstinate man and a man with a temper, and the widow didn't blame him a bit when he pounded his leg with his fist and replied to her:

"I don't want to be mean about this thing, but I want and will have possession of my own. I will give you one week to clear out. If you are not gone by that time I'll have you thrown out."

"You are invited to dinner a week from today," the widow quietly replied. Mr. Dayton went to town to consult a lawyer and the sheriff. The lawyer told him that all the rights in the case were his, and the sheriff said he would put him in possession as soon as the writ of execution was placed in his hands. Meanwhile if he could bluff the widow it would be so much gained for him. He returned to the farm after a day or two to bluff. He was as kindly received as if he had come to buy paper rags and sell tinware, and, though he was vexed and annoyed, he couldn't help but admit that the widow had beautiful blue eyes.

"I have ascertained that I have the law on my side," he began, "but, as I said to you before, I don't want to be mean about it."

"No; I don't think you are a mean man," she kindly replied. "I want possession, but I don't want any row, and if you would consent to take $50 and vacate next week I think I would pay it."

"You are a generous man, and I won't rob you. Three or four years hence, after the case has gone to the supreme court and been decided against me, I may look around for another farm."

"Woman, you are defying the law," claimed the widower as patience ceased to be a virtue. "I tell you I'll have possession here if I have to dump everything and everybody into the public highway with my own hands."

"Come to dinner any day—glad to see you," was her reply as she followed him to the door.

"Yes; I see," mused his lawyer as the widower returned and reported.

"The widow is simply a trespasser. She ought to be put off at once."

"Yes; I see," mused the sheriff when he was appealed to. "That writ ought to be placed in my hands."

Both lawyer and sheriff hinted at a certain line of conduct, though protesting that they were not legal hints, and three days later John Dayton drove out to his farm prepared to take all the bulls and cows by the horns. He began at the barnyard. He opened wide the gates and turned a one eyed ram and a one horned cow into the road. A couple of hogs with curls in their tails would have been next on the programme had not the Widow Parsons appeared on the scene. She was accompanied by a bulldog, who seemed anxious to complicate things, and her voice was not at all high pitched as she warned the widower off the premises. He pounded on the barn door and replied:

"This is my property. I am here to take possession. The widow and the bulldog who interfere with me must take the consequences."

The consequences were taken. As he started for the curly tailed hogs the bulldog started for him, and when the widower got through with the circus he had half a dozen bites to carry back to town.

"Stars above, but it is nothing less than a case of murderous assault!" exclaimed the lawyer when the story had been told. "You have only to apply for a warrant to have the Widow Parsons sleep in jail tonight, and she must surely be convicted when she comes to trial."

"Never in all my life did I hear of such an outrage," added the sheriff, "and I will take the greatest pleasure in making the arrest."

But when the bites had got over aching more hints—not legal hints—were thrown out, and as a result John Dayton made a fourth visit to his farm. This time he knocked at the front door of the house instead of stopping at the barnyard, and when admitted he said:

"Widow Parsons, I'm a determined man. I'm bound to have my farm if I have to take you with it."

The widow looked at him for a long minute, and there was a smile around her mouth as she quietly replied:

"It might be your best way. Come a-courting, and we'll see about it."

And six weeks later there was neither widow nor widower. John Dayton and his wife were running the farm, and the bulldog was quiescent.

True Love Is Not Jealous.

The greatest thing in the world is love. It is the most beautiful thing too. Strangely enough, however, it is apt to go hand in hand with the ugliest thing, which is jealousy. The green eyed monster's favorite victims are lovers.

No sight is more terrible than the jealous rage of a lover. The man who suspects his sweetheart of flirting with some one else is enduring such pain that he is hardly responsible for his actions.

Similarly, the girl who sees that her fiancé is faithless experiences a heart-ache which is little short of maddening. It is sad when such suffering is without any real cause. The man or girl who is a victim of unreasoning jealousy is to be pitied. The intensity of their feelings cannot be realized by an outsider.

True love is trustful, above all things. Sweethearts who trust each other are never worried with jealousy, nor have they any need to be. A true lover never flirts. He would not be a true lover if he did. A girl who really loves her sweetheart can bear to see him walking or talking with another girl without the slightest pang. She knows well that there is only one girl in the world for him, and that is herself. In his heart she reigns supreme, just as he does in hers. Polite and attentive though he may be to many another maid, he reserves one thing for her alone. This one thing is love.

Making Amends.

A poor Turkish slater of Constantinople, being at work upon the roof of a house, lost his footing and fell into the narrow street upon a man. The pedestrian was killed by the concussion, while the slater escaped without material injury.

A son of the deceased caused the slater to be arrested. The cadi listened attentively and in the end asked the slater what he had to say in his defense.

"Dispenser of justice," answered the accused, "it is even as this man says, but heaven forbid that there should be evil in my heart. I am a poor man and know not how to make amends."

The son of the man who had been killed thereupon demanded that condign punishment should be inflicted on the accused.

The cadi meditated a few moments and finally said, "It shall be so." Then to the slater he said, "Thou shalt stand in the street where the father of this young man stood when thou didst fall on him."

And to the accuser he added: "Thou shalt, if it please thee, go up on the roof and fall upon the culprit even as he fell upon thy father. Allah be praised!"

The Bee's Stinging Apparatus.

A bee's sting, unlike that of a wasp, is always left in the wound; so the first thing to do is to remove it. Do not take it between finger and thumb, for that will cause it to open and release more of its poison. The right method is to push it out by rubbing up against it with the back of the thumb nail. To remove the pain there are many remedies, most of them homely. Here are a few: A slice of onion, ordinary laundry blue, sal volatile, honey, earth moistened with saliva. One or another of these remedies is always at hand, and a handkerchief will serve as a bandage to keep it in place as long as necessary.

WHITE ROSES

By ELSIE CARMICHAEL

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

Dick walked down the avenue slowly, so deeply absorbed that he looked straight at Mrs. De Feyster Jones and cut her, to that young woman's surprise.

"Why, what can the matter be with Dickie?" she said to herself, with an almost irresistible impulse to turn around and look after the melancholy figure sauntering down the street.

Mildred Jones had been a friend of Dick Eton's ever since they had played in the park and gone to dancing school together. Two years before she had married De Feyster Jones, and now one of her greatest pleasures was chaperoning Dick and his various ladyloves.

"I believe Dick's in love again," she exclaimed, half aloud, "or perhaps this is the real thing at last. I wish it were and Dickie would settle down."

At the same moment Dick was passing a florist's. A happy thought struck him.

"I'll settle it tonight," he said to himself. "I'll make Doris say whether she cares for me or not. If she won't have me I'll, I'll!" His eyes wandered up and down the crowded avenue, brilliant in the spring sunshine. I'll do something desperate," he threatened.

He went into the shop, heavy with the fragrance of roses and violets, and tried to decide what he would send her. He was going to take her to a musicale at Mrs. Schuyler's that evening, and as he had forgotten to ask her the color of her gown he chose white roses. Going to the desk, he took out a visiting card and stood hesitating, pen in hand. Should he leave it to the flowers or ask her tonight at the musicale? He remembered a particularly cozy and retired corner behind the palms in Mrs. Schuyler's conservatory.

"No, I cannot wait until then," he thought. "I'll let the flowers speak."

"SO YOU COULDN'T CARRY THEM, DORIS!" HE CRIED HOARSELY.

Hastily he wrote on the card, "If you care for me a little bit, Doris, carry this tonight."

Then he sealed it up and gave it to the man. "Send the flowers at once to 37 West—th street," he said as he paid for them. "On no account let there be any delay."

"Arrah, thin, I want some flowers, a rare illigant design, for me 'cousin, Mrs. O'Flannagan, who's dade," exclaimed a voice. A large, showily dressed, red faced Irish woman pushed past him to the counter.

Dick went out of the shop filled with mingled feelings of doubt, uncertainty and a great love for Doris. As he strolled over to the club he marvelled at his own presumption in asking such a peerless creature to come down to earth for his sake.

That evening while he was waiting for Doris he roamed restlessly about the great drawing room. When a little rustle of silken draperies announced her coming he stood like a soldier at attention, awaiting his sentence. The portieres were pushed aside, and Doris, in a trailing white gown, stood outlined against the heavy curtain—Doris with her blue eyes flashing ominously—and with empty hands.

Everything seemed to spin around. "So you couldn't carry them, Doris," he cried hoarsely, while his hand clasped the back of the chair.

"I don't see how you could have asked such a thing," she said icily. She was still standing and did not make any movement to come nearer him.

"I know it was presumptuous," he admitted mournfully.

She laughed mirthlessly. "I thought at first that you meant it as a joke," she said. She walked over to the fireplace, her long, fluffy skirt trailing behind her on the polished floor. The firelight played on her hair, on her white, sculptured shoulders and her exquisite arms. Dick thought that she had never looked so beautiful, and his hands tightened on the carved oak chair back.

"I knew you were always playing jokes on people," he went on, "but I never supposed you could joke about such a thing as this."

She looked up at him as he towered above her. He was a very good looking man, she admitted, with his splendid athletic build and his well bred, clear cut features. Then she dropped her eyes to the fire again.

"So you really had the impudence to send it?" she said cruelly.

Dick became a little angry. "I may be presumptuous," he cried, "but I fail to see why you should look on it as impudent. Because a man sends a girl flowers and shows her that he cares for her with all the depths of his being you think he is impudent?"

"Well, I don't care for your taste," she exclaimed. "I consider the whole thing an insult, Mr. Eton, and I do not care to be one of the girls on whom you play such jokes. I have a headache and am not going to Mrs. Schuyler's tonight. Shall I ring?"

Dick gathered himself together. "Good night," he said coldly and met the footman at the door.

After luncheon the next day he found himself in Mildred Jones' cozy little drawing room pouring out the whole story into her sympathetic ears.

"And you sent her white roses?" she inquired when he had finished the tale. "Yes, Doris was here at luncheon, and she told me all about it. I think, my dear boy, that there has been some great mistake. But don't be discouraged. I will try to manage some way to help you out. Doris was very angry, but I am sure she will forgive you."

There was an amused twinkle in her eyes that Dick could not understand, but he felt her sympathy and went back to the club with a lighter heart.

Perhaps an hour later he was called to the telephone and at once recognized Doris' voice.

"Hello! Is that you, Dick?" she said, and there was a joyous ring about it that set Dick's heart to beating. "Did you send me white roses yesterday?"

"Yes," he cried exultantly, "white roses and maidenhair."

Doris laughed. "Well, Dick, can you—come up this evening?" She hesitated. "If you will come I will—carry your flowers." She shut off the telephone instantly, and Dick was left with the receiver at his ear and a beatific expression on his face.

It was with different feelings from those of the night before that he stood by the fire in Doris' drawing room that evening listening for her footstep. But so quietly she came that she stood between the portieres before he knew it. Doris, beautiful as ever, in softest rose color and holding in her hands—Dick, who had started forward with a glad cry, stopped, and his hands dropped to his side.

"Good heavens, Doris! Where did you get that awful thing?" he exclaimed.

Doris, with a merry laugh, held up a hideous form of red and white immortelles with stiff, red roses wired on toothpicks, spelling out the word "Hope." "Your flowers," she explained.

"Good Lord!" he gasped. "Doris, you didn't think I sent you that monstrosity, did you? Where are my roses?" Then his face cleared. "It was that miserable Irish woman!" he cried. "She came in as I went out to order some flowers for a funeral, and that stupid florist got the cards and addresses mixed."

"Never mind, Dick," she said, looking at him coquettishly. "You don't seem to realize that I am carrying your flowers." But the last word was almost lost as Dick crushed her in his arms, the "illigant design" and all.

Compounding a Prescription. "I noticed," said the druggist to his assistant, "that a gentleman came in with a prescription and that you took it and gave him the stuff in about three minutes. What do you mean by that?"

"It was only a little carbolic acid and water," replied the assistant. "I simply had to pour a few drops of acid into the bottle and fill it up with water."

"Never mind if you had only to do that," the druggist declared. "Don't you know that every prescription must take at least half an hour to dispense, or the customer will think he isn't getting anything for his money?"

"When a prescription for salt and water or peppermint and cough syrup is handed to you you must look at it doubtfully, as if it were very hard to make up. Then you must bring it to me, and we will both read it and shake our heads. After that you go back to the customer and ask him if he wants it today. When he says he does you answer that you'll make a special effort."

"Now, a patient appreciates a prescription that there has been so much trouble over, and when he takes it he derives some benefit from it. But don't you do any more of that three minute prescription business, my boy, if you want to become a first class druggist."

Not an Ostrich. "Baby was playing with my thimble this morning, and I can't find it anywhere. Do you know what he did with it, Aunt Ella?"

"No; I have not seen it. Marjorie. Look on the floor."

"I cannot find it," said Marjorie. "I am sure he swallowed it."

"Don't be absurd! How could a baby swallow a thimble?" replied her aunt.

"Ella! I say, Ella! Have you seen my pearl necklace yet? Baby had it yesterday, and now I cannot find it. Do you think he could have swallowed it?"

"No, he couldn't," answered his sister curtly.

"Oh, please, mmm, I can't find the egg beater anywhere. Baby had it yesterday, and now it's lost."

"Good heavens! Do you people think my baby is an ostrich?" cried the indignant mother.—New York Press.
